National Anti-Slavery Standard.

VOL. XVI. NO. 12. NEW YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1855. WHOLE NO. 792.

National Anti-Slavery Standard.

Published Weekly, on Saturday,

AT TWO DOLLARS PER ANNUM,

BY THE

AMERICAN ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY,

At its Office, 138 Nassau St., New York,

AND AT THE OFFICE OF THE

PENNSYLVANIA ANTI-SLAVERY SOCIETY,

31 North Fifth St., Philadelphia.

Advertisements inserted at $1 per square for the first insertion, and 25 cents for every subsequent one. For advertisements less than a square, 50 cents for each insertion.

THE STANDARD.

WEST INDIA EMANCIPATION.

Celebration of the New York Anti-Slavery Society,

AT MORRIS'S GROVE,

Near Jamaica, Long Island, August 1st, 1855.

Reported for THE STANDARD by W. H. BURR.

In spite of a lowering sky in the morning, a better day for a Pic-Nic could scarcely be desired, and a finer one had not occurred in a month. The threatening aspect of the weather, no doubt, kept many away; nevertheless, the attendance was quite as large as on either of the previous Anniversaries, and a more attentive audience on such an occasion could not have been expected, the greater part listening with close attention to the speaking, which occupied more than four hours. At 11 o'clock the train stopped at Morris's Grove, and at half-past 11 the exercises commenced:

SYDNEY HOWARD GAY, President of the Society, called the meeting to order. He stated that a part of the programme would not be fulfilled, inasmuch as the Band that was engaged to be present, on seeing the complexion of a part of the people assembled at the ferry, had become frightened and ran away. Wallace's Band could not play to coloured people. The exercises would therefore commence by singing,

The audience then joined in singing

"From all that dwell below the skies;"

after which, prayer was offered by Rev. J. W. WILLIAMS, of Bridge street Church, Brooklyn.

The PRESIDENT then introduced the Hon. E. D. CULVER, of Brooklyn, as the first speaker, announcing him as one of those men who carried with him, many years ago, to Washington one of those useful things called a backbone—an article much more uncommon then than now even—who kept it there uncrooked, without a joint in it, and brought it home with him, stiff, straight and strong (cheers).

SPEECH OF JUDGE CULVER.

FELLOW-CITIZENS: It gives me great pleasure, this morning, to be present and mingle in these deliberations. This day wakes up in the hearts of all assembled here a double train of emotions—those of sincere congratulation and deep gratitude, and those of profound sorrow; and, as I once said to the coloured people on another occasion, if I were a minister instead of a lawyer, I should be dreadfully tempted to preach, and my text would be, "Rejoice with those that rejoice and weep with those that weep." This is exactly that occasion. We come here to-day to testify our feelings of sympathy and congratulation with a portion of our fellow-men that, twenty-one years ago this day, received the boon of freedom by an act of the British Parliament. This act of emancipation took effect in the British Colonies on the 1st of August, 1834; so that the child born on that day this day attains majority—this day is 21 years of age. I am very much in favour of some appropriate commemoration of such great events as these—these luminous spots that tell on the page of the history of the world's march—spots that we can point back to, recalling the circumstances which gave rise to them; they should never be permitted to pass away from our minds. The great lawgiver of Israel, in directing that people to commemorate the passover, said, "And ye shall observe this thing for an ordinance to you and your sons forever. And it shall come to pass when your children shall say unto you, What mean ye by this service? that ye shall say, It is the sacrifice of the Lord's passover." Why was the Jew so tenacious, every year, of its observance? Because it reminded him of that dark and fearful time when the angel that was commissioned to destroy all the first born in the land of Egypt, as the last fearful judgment upon the oppressor, causing him to let the people of Israel go, passed over the houses of the oppressed where the blood was sprinkled upon the door posts, and its inmates were left alive. It was to commemorate this great interposition of Providence in behalf of that nation, at that critical moment when the chains of slavery were about to drop from their limbs. Once a year, the Israelites assembled to eat unleavened bread, to remind them of the haste with which, on that memorable night, they took their departure from the land of bondage. There is an appropriateness in such celebrations as these; they call to mind the struggles which mark the events they commemorate, and encourage us in our present struggles to a similar end.

The cause of British Emancipation had its enemies. A few self-sacrificing men were held up as targets for public derision and scorn. But, strong in faith, they foresaw the triumph of their cause. And when at length it did triumph and the day of emancipation was approaching, there were thousands who said, when the 1st of August comes, the King's troops must be called out to quell the insurrections. There will be bloodshed and murder; the masters will have their throats cut; their houses will be burnt and their cattle slaughtered. But the day came and their predictions failed. One of those islands, you will recollect (Antigua), chose the alternative of giving the act immediate effect instead of having the slaves serve, as apprentices, a few years longer, and what was the effect on that island? In the harbour of St. Johns there were four American vessels; they hoisted sail on the day before and went out of the harbour. Poor, cringing, guilty fellows, they thought the liberated slaves were going to act just as they would have acted, and that their vessels were not safe in the harbour. The blacks assembled in one of the largest cathedrals and held what they call a watch-meeting on the night of the 31st of July; they kept watch until about five minutes before 12. Then the missionary who conducted the meeting requested them all to kneel down. It was done. One of the sublimest spectacles the world has ever witnessed was then presented. On their knees, lest they should be lifted up with pride, they received the precious boon of freedom. At the first stroke of the hour of 12 upon the clock, there was silence throughout that vast assembly; perfect stillness reigned, broken only by the strokes of the clock of the great cathedral. The last stroke, the death knell of slavery, pealed forth; a moment afterwards, says the historian, a flash of lightning, accompanied by a loud clap of thunder, followed, as if God himself had set his seal upon the act. The audience rose up, and for the space of about one minute not a word was spoken. There are times, fellow-citizens, when silence is more eloquent than any language the human heart can utter. After the momentary silence, came a general burst of joy. They threw up their free hands; they embraced each other; they ran to and fro; and every now and then, amid the confusion, there broke forth, in the negro dialect, expressions of thanksgiving and glory to God, and blessings upon those who had given them their freedom. What a spectacle for the King's troops! How many bayonets were wanted to keep such a people in subjection! What a lesson was taught in that event! Let nations learn from this that it is safest to do right.

One of the old, stale objections to emancipation in the Southern States is the danger of insurrection. Now, in those States there is a large preponderance of white population. How was it in the West India Islands? The population of the coloured to the white population in Antigua was about 16 to 1; in Jamaica about 11 to 1; in Barbadoes about 6 to 1. With all the predictions about insurrection and bloodshed, there was not an outrage committed by the blacks in the process of emancipation. It was contrary to human nature for them to turn upon their masters because they had been set free. While they were enslaved, there might be reason to fear insurrections, but not in the act of making them free.

Twenty-one years have passed since the Act of Emancipation began to take effect. It is said that emancipation has been a curse, because those islands do not raise as many hogsheads of sugar as before. That is the standard by which slaveholders and their apologists measure the benefits of emancipation. If you want to know what are the benefits of emancipation, go and see how many more schools, churches and Bibles there are in those islands now; how many more children that can read and write, and how much the physical and mental condition of the people is improved.

But while we rejoice with those that rejoice, we must weep with those that weep. Three millions and a half of this country are in as abject a condition as were those British slaves in 1834. What can we do to usher in the day when our own people shall receive that boon which was conferred on the slaves of the British West Indies in 1834? I know this is a great subject. We have come here to-day under the auspices of a Society that represents extreme views on the anti-slavery question. A friend of mine, seeing it announced that I was to speak at this meeting, said to me, "Don't you know that you were elected Judge by Whigs?" "Certainly," said I, "so they said." "And are you going to mingle in a Garrisonian celebration?" "I am," said I. "Don't you think it is rather an unpopular move?" said he. "I can't help that," I replied; "I never feel better than when I am with honest men, I don't care whether it is popular or not" (cheers). "Don't you know," continued he, "that a woman is going to speak at the meeting?" "So much the better," said I, "I like the ladies too well to run away from them, and I shall be rejoiced to hear Mrs. Rose speak, if she is there" (cheers). Fellow-citizens, I have sought for two or three years to mingle in your celebrations, for I felt that this was an event worth commemorating, and I wanted to testify to the fidelity, consistency and perseverance with which this wing of the anti-slavery army has maintained the fight against the Slave Power (cheers). I honour the men and women that can stand up amid obloquy and reproach—amid denunciation from this political party and that political party, this church and that church, this minister and that minister, and remain firm and true to freedom. You might as well undertake to stop the voice of thunder as to shut their mouths, or turn the mighty torrent from its course as to arrest them in their career (cheers).

It makes but little difference to-day whether we take an observation from the stand-point of the politician, the moralist or the religious man; we have got to come back to the same conclusion with respect to this great adversary with which we are waging war. Look at it in its religious aspect. It has laid its iron hand upon the pulpit and made it dumb, or, if it has spoken, it has been for slavery. It makes and interpolates creeds, and moulds the sentiment of the religious bodies. The Church, with here and there a bright exception, has had to yield and succumb to the Slave Power.

But I shall feel more at home in discussing the question in its political aspect, and my friend Garrison will take care of the moral and religious aspect. Fifty or sixty years ago, when slavery had but seven States in this Union, the policy of this Government was to restrict slavery; hence the Ordinance of 1787, prohibiting it in the territory north-west of the Ohio. But now, in 1855, there are fifteen States that have the dark pall of slavery spread over them. The last one that was admitted was Texas, which, like Pharaoh's lean kine, seems to have swallowed up all the fat cattle that existed before. As the slave territory has extended, the Slave Power has become more and more aggressive, until, at length, the question of slavery has absorbed all other questions. There is not one of the old political issues that is now left; they are all sunk in the one paramount question of slavery. We have now got to deal with slavery, not as it was in 1787, but as it is in 1855—a giant, bidding defiance to every arm of the Government. Slavery undertakes to make laws and to explain them—to give new interpretations to Constitution and laws, such as was never contended for in times past. Less than two years ago, the people of the country were supposed to be embarked on board of the ship called the Compromise or Finality. They were told, and most of them, I suppose, believed, that all this question of slavery was settled forever. There had been some doctors at Washington that had attempted to heal the "five gaping wounds" of the body politic, and having, as they thought, succeeded, the whole country had embarked on board the ship Compromise, and, in 1854, were sailing along on the ocean in calm security. But lo! at midnight, the cry is heard, "breakers ahead!" Every passenger leaps from his berth and all hands are on deck. What now? There is a wave of agitation breaking upon us, and there are breakers in sight. Presently the ship came upon the breakers, and there she is now, a prey to the fury of the waves. "No more agitation" a little while ago was the cry, and now what do we see? Such a hustling among the political parties in fifteen States of this Union as was never before known. What a change of front! What a right about face! The like of it has never been known. And what has caused it? What started the agitation among the free States? We were told by the doctors that agitation was at an end; what was it that opened it afresh and more threatening than ever? A bold attempt had been made by the Slave Power, while the country was lulled to rest, to remove the landmarks of freedom and open to slavery a Territory twelve times as large as the State of New York, forty-two times as large as the State of Massachusetts, and as large as the original thirteen States of this Union—territory that had been dedicated to freedom for thirty years, and that had been all along regarded as secure for freedom—territory situated mid-way between the Atlantic and Pacific, a sort of resting place in the centre of the continent. The proposition was made in Congress to open all that country to slavery—to subject it to the blighting influence of that institution—to make its soil like the worn-out soil of Virginia, instead of the fruitful fields of New York—to make it a land of dirks and pistols, like Arkansas, instead of thrift and wealth, like Ohio. It was a proposition fraught with injustice. And who was it, you may well ask, that made this demand? I am glad to say it was not the people. I may go further and say it was not the people either of the North or South. If you were to gather up all the petitions in favour of that infamous measure, you could put them all in a lady's portfolio; while if you turn to the remonstrances against it, you might gather enough to make a pile as big as a haystack in old Connecticut. The remonstrances came in so frequent and formidable that Senators looked pale; and when that one signed by the three thousand New England clergymen was presented, I don't wonder that Cass and Douglas cried out somewhat like certain persons of old, "Why hast thou come to torment us before the time?" (Laughter.) The people did not ask for the measure; who, then, did ask for it? A set of political demagogues, who were about entering a scrub race for the next Presidency—political Esaus, who were ready to sell their birthright for a mess of pottage; but the best of it is, they are going to get cheated out of the pottage (laughter). There was a prize in view, and the man who could roll over in the dirt the most was most likely to win. The people of the North looked upon the act with horror, and the more so because it was an infraction of what they had, for thirty years, believed to be a solemn compact—a compact which Webster had once said was irrepealable in nature, and which Clay had pronounced fundamental in character and could not be touched. And yet that compact was annulled. Thirty-four years ago, the South stood begging for that compact; it was reluctantly granted by the North; and so unpopular was it that the Northern members who voted for it could not sustain themselves with their constituents, but went down to their political graves, without hope of a resurrection. The people saw and felt the injustice and iniquity of the compromise, and could not pardon their representatives for the act. Nevertheless, as the thing was done, the North concluded to abide by it. Then followed the erection of the State of Arkansas, and the southern portion of the Territory was all organized and slavery permanently established south of 36° 30′. But, just as soon as it was proposed to organize a Territory north of 36° 30′, the South cried out, "A bad bargain; throw up the cards; a new deal." The North had supposed that there would be as much honour among the people of the South as among thieves and horse-jockeys; but in this we were mistaken. Thus they treated the compact that they had begged of us, thirty-four years before. I don't wonder the very name "compact" has become odious. But I must say, there were some features of that Compromise that were more like a Compromise than any that we have made since. There was something [illegible] on the side of freedom; we were promised a fine lot of free States in the North-West.

Now, what was it that emboldened the politicians of the South to make this demand of opening this Territory to slavery? I need not tell you that it was the acquiescence of the North in the Compromise of 1850. Had the North indignantly spurned that Compromise or refused to enter into it without some decent equivalent, this thing would never have been attempted. It was found that almost every man who dared to speak against the Compromise of 1850 was cried down at home and crushed by his own party, and hence they thought any new aggression upon the North would not be resisted to any great degree, or, at any rate, would be finally acquiesced in.

Now, I never could see any merit in this Compromise of 1850. The truth of the matter is, every one of the five parts of that Compromise was for the benefit of slavery. A compromise implies two sides, but in this compromise there was but one. Each party is supposed to give and to get something, but certain it is that the North got nothing in this. Let us see if the North got anything.

We are told that the North got California. What of that? That was the seventeenth State that had come into the Union with a Constitution of its own selection. What great gift or gain to the North was that?

But we are told that we got something in the District of Columbia. What did we get there? Merely a law that slaves shall not be brought into the District for purposes of exportation—just such a law as Maryland had put on her statute book nineteen years ago, and Virginia twenty-five, I believe. Some people suppose that, since 1850, no one has a right to buy and sell slaves in the District of Columbia. You may go there and buy a hundred negroes this day. All we got was the introduction of a law into the District of Columbia that had existed for years in some of the old slave States.

Those are the two things that we were supposed to get by the Compromise. Now, what did we surrender?

We surrendered, in the first place, the application of the Wilmot Proviso to all the new Territories—a proviso that the Legislatures of fifteen free States (with the exception of the upper House of Iowa) had declared ought to be applied. Shame on the cowardly North, when they were whipped out of their position by the slave-driver's lash.

Another thing that we gave to slavery was the infamous Fugitive Slave law, making the whole North a hunting ground for the slave-catcher and agreeing to aid him in the pursuit. We agreed that a commissioner, a creature unknown to the Constitution, should sit in judgment upon the fugitive, and we agreed to bribe him, by giving him ten dollars if he sent the victim back into slavery, and only five if he declared him free. We took away all right of interference with his process by any Court or officer whatever; we declared that the master's evidence should be conclusive against the fugitive, who should not tell his own story at all; we took away all right of appeal and of trial by jury.

One more thing we surrendered to slavery, and that was 92,000 square miles where slavery did not exist, which we gave to Texas to be made slave territory, and paid her $10,000,000 to take it and be still and live like a good neighbour with the rest of the family.

Thus I have given you a fair statement of the Compromise of 1850; when you find people so lost to all sense of shame that they will submit to such a thing, and call it a compromise which shall be final and stop all agitation, you will find people but little removed from the condition of serfs.

Now, what was the excuse set up for the abrogation of the Missouri Compromise? The politicians said that it was void of any constitutional authority. Now, it would seem, from the nature of the case, that Congress would have authority to restrict slavery; and when you open the Constitution and read that "Congress shall make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territories and other property of the United States," can you have any doubt about what that passage means? Don't it mean laws? What school ma'am in a log schoolhouse that could not understand the meaning clearly? And yet our politicians will put on their glasses, look grave and thoughtful, and say, I do not think Congress has the constitutional power to make laws regulating the Territories. Comment is unnecessary.

But the Government sometimes is its own interpreter. In 1787, the Congress of the Confederation attempted to limit slavery, and it excluded it from every inch of territory that the Government then owned. The Declaration of Independence, many of you are taught to believe, was the proudest monument to Jefferson; the Ordinance of 1787 is a prouder monument to his memory than that. Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Michigan and Ohio are the fruit of that Ordinance. See how they thrive, compared with those on the other side of the Ohio river. Washington, Jefferson, Munroe, Jackson—Tyler and Polk, if you will allow me to mention little Presidents also—all put their signature to laws restricting slavery in the Territories. True, Polk choked a little under the operation, but he did it in the Oregon bill.

Now, I love to make a doctor take his own medicine. Cass and Douglas, in 1854, say Congress cannot restrict slavery; and yet, in 1848, when the Oregon bill was passed, Cass, Douglas, Dickinson, and other Northern Senators, recorded their votes in favour of a bill which forever prohibited slavery in the Territory of Oregon. Tell me when this new light broke upon the minds of these men? Again, Douglas, in 1848, proposed to run the Missouri Compromise line through to the Pacific; how strange that it took him till 1854 to discover that it was unconstitutional to do so.

What is another excuse for abrogating that Compromise? The South say, "We cannot take our slaves there, and it is unjust to exclude us." Never was there a greater fallacy. We offer no impediment to their taking their slaves into the Territories; it is only their slave laws that cannot go there. We deprive the South of no advantage that we do not deprive ourselves of. We do not claim to take our slaves with us, and we insist that they shall not take theirs. You remember how Senator Wade replied to Senator Badger, who had made this excuse for repealing the Missouri Compromise. The Senator, said Mr. Wade, complains of the injustice of preventing his poor old Mammy from going with him into the Territory; we do not wish to prevent her going with the Senator, we only want to prevent his selling his poor old Mammy when he gets there (applause). There is a great humbug in this pretence. Because the South cannot take their local laws into the domain of the United States, they cry out, persecution. Here are thirty-one States; if you are going to take the local laws of one State into a Territory, you must take the local laws of all. Suppose one of the States should have a law of primogeniture; could it carry such a law into a Territory? The emigrants from the rest of the States would protest against it as an invasion of their rights under laws which are more equal and just, and how would you reconcile the matter? It is for the General Government to declare what laws and regulations are needful for the Territory and suited to its condition. Slavery is the creature of local law, and cannot go one inch beyond the bounds of the State where slave laws exist. The Territory of Nebraska has passed a law prohibiting the sale of intoxicating drinks. Now, suppose a New York liquor-dealer goes out there to set up the liquor business, and, finding the law against him, pronounces it an invasion of his rights and undertakes to upset the law or defy it; would n't he have the same right to do it as the slaveholder has to carry his slaves there and hold them? Precisely. We cannot introduce the laws of the whole thirty-one States there, and it is for Congress to say what [illegible] and sell cotton. Now, I believe there are some things in that Constitution on the side of freedom; but the very moment you attempt to apply one of those principles in favour of freedom, the slaveholder cries out, "Hands off." There are two sides to the Constitution, but the slaveholder would have but one. Let me illustrate it.

Two men form a copartnership in the use of a long strip of territory. It is agreed that the one occupying the southern portion shall raise geese, and the northern occupant foxes—two not very companionable creatures—and both shall be allowed to run at large. By and by, the man from the South comes running to his Northern neighbour, saying, "Do you know your foxes are eating up all my geese?" "Are they?" Well, I expected nothing else than that they would eat up some. You didn't suppose they could be running in the same lot without destroying some of your geese, did you?" "No matter what I understood, you have got to take your foxes out," says the Southern man. "No, sir," says the other, "the agreement was that they should run." "I don't care for that," says the Southern man; "I will kill every one of your foxes you have got if you let them loose." Now, which of these men breaks the compact? You hear a great deal about dissolving the Union and breaking the compact; who is it that has broken the compact?

A VOICE—The goose man (laughter).

Judge CULVER—Yes, I think it is the goose man. When we entered into this constitutional compact, slavery was allowed to have being, but the framers took special care to put in certain checks and neutralizing ingredients—certain provisions that were calculated, in their legitimate action and nature, by and by, to root out slavery. And now, when those provisions begin to exert their force in checking slavery, the South threatens to dissolve unless we will take special pains to conteract their force. Slavery was allowed a negative existence; but, to keep it in check, the Constitution guaranteed freedom of speech and of the press, the right of petition, and the writ of habeas corpus. Now, after fifty years, these foxes begin to make a little inroad upon the aggressions of slavery. When Mr. Giddings, in 1842, on the floor of Congress, claimed the right to be heard on a perfectly legitimate subject, what did the South do? They arraigned him before the House and reprimanded him. Giddings would not submit to it, but resigned his commission, went home to his constituents, and appealed to them. That honoured constituency, to their everlasting credit, turned out in the dead of the winter, reelected him and sent him back to Washington; and in six weeks from the time he took his leave of the House of Representatives, he was on the floor of Congress again (cheers). That is the way the South observes the constitutional guarantee of the right of petition. When the press began to speak on the soil of Kentucky, in favour of only gradual emancipation, upon the ground of political economy, sixty gentlemen with ruffled shirts turned out, in open day, and demolished it. That is the way the South tolerates the press. Again, as a worthy minister of New England stood by his press, which had been once, twice and thrice assailed and cast into the river, a mob, armed with rifles, came over from a slave State into Illinois, and the champion of a free press fell, pierced with four bullets, and his murderers went unrebuked. He now sleeps unhonoured; but he will not sleep much longer, thank God, unless we misinterpret the signs of the times, before He who sits in the circle of the heavens will have severed the last chain that holds a human being in bondage. Then, I trust, we shall see the coloured man take his child by the hand, lead him to the banks of the Mississippi, and point to the grave where Lovejoy sleeps, a martyr to the cause of the bondman (cheers).

One of the oldest and most honoured representatives from New England undertook to defend the right of petition, and claimed to be heard upon it. They arrested him, brought him before the bar of the House, and put him on trial. But they could not deny him the right to be heard, a right which every accused party is entitled to. John Quincy Adams began his defence, and, for three long days, that old man, with his trembling voice, waged war against the powers of Slavery, and came off victorious. Never did that man appear in such grandeur as he did on that occasion, encountering the formidable powers of darkness. A few months afterwards, he took a journey to Saratoga, and, while there, hundreds of friends came to congratulate him; and even Chancellor Walworth, old hunker Democrat as he was, forgot his political feelings, and caught the old man in his arms and wept like a child, saying, you have been true to freedom.

The writ of Habeas Corpus was another constitutional guarantee that was never to be suspended except in case of insurrection or invasion; and yet we have seen our coloured citizens, clothed with all the rights of freemen, taken from our ships, in the harbour at Charleston, and imprisoned; and when Massachusetts sends her messenger to try the question in the Courts of the United States, the cry is raised that there is an incendiary among them, and the messenger is compelled to return. How different would the case have been if a citizen of South Carolina had been imprisoned in Boston, and a messenger had been sent to try the question; not a lawyer in Boston but would have tendered his services to try the issue in favour of South Carolina.

I recollect the first petition I ever presented in Congress; it was signed by 2,000 of my constituents, and prayed for the peaceful abolition of slavery in the District of Columbia. It was a petition got up by a Quaker woman, but the signatures included some of the stiffest politicians of both parties. I rose with a great deal of dignity, and, having presented it, had hardly taken my seat before Mr. Bayley, of Virginia, jumped up and moved to lay it on the table, and it went there in a hurry. Presently Mr. Simms, of South Carolina, introduced a petition to reduce the tariff; it was read and referred to one of the stiffest committees in the House, and a report was made upon it soon after. How is this? said I. We treat your petitions with respect; we receive them and report upon them. We will allow you to come to Boston, Providence and Lowell, and advocate the beauties of your slave system as much as you please. You may tell our factory girls how much better off they would be if they were to run away and sell themselves South. We invite you to do all this. We will not break your presses nor shoot your editors; we will put press against press, editor against editor, fact against fact, argument against argument. Where is the secret of all this? I will tell you. It is found in a memorable declaration made eighteen hundred years ago—"He that doeth evil hateth the light, neither cometh to the light, lest his deeds should be reproved."

Look over the list of Presidents of this country. Up to the time of Fillmore, there had been 64 years of the administration of this Government, and only 12 years of that time had a Northern man occupied the Presidential chair. And the Northern Presidents had never sat more than one term, while Washington, Jefferson, Madison, Munroe and Jackson had each occupied eight years.

Slavery prescribes its tests, and those who fail to come up to the mark are cut off. If a man is opposed to the Fugitive Slave bill, he is proscribed; if he was an opponent of the Mexican war, the South sets its mark on him. When I voted, with thirteen others, against the Mexican war, I was counted among a band of traitors. I was glad afterwards to hear Henry Clay say, "If I had been a member of the lower House, you should have had my vote added, making fifteen." The South put the chalice to the lips of Van Buren, and he rejected it; they tried the same to Clay, and he refused it. What was the result? Both were slaughtered at the polls. Van Buren had gone farther than any Northern President had gone before; and though he pleaded the example of Jackson, his predecessor, in his favour for refusing a certain measure, it would not do—off with his head. And if his lips could have spoken any sentiment, it would have been, "Ye living men, come view the ground where you must shortly lie" (laughter).

And what do the slaveholders ask now? "Do you believe that the Missouri Compromise line ought to be restored? If you do, then you can find no favour South." Mark me, no candidate who is in favour of the restoration of that line gets one electoral vote south of Mason and Dixon's line in 1856. A few weeks ago, at the Know-Nothing Convention at Philadelphia, Mr. Ford, of Ohio, brought Southerners up to the confessional. They admitted the act repealing the Missouri Compromise to be wrong; but when asked if they were willing to restore it, not one of them would answer in the affirmative. When slavery gets one step ahead, it never retreats; and slavery never stands still; it is constantly seeking to make new inroads upon freedom. Their next step will be, perhaps, to have the ordinance excluding slavery taken out of the Oregon bill, and thus open all that Territory to slavery. They will threaten to dissolve the Union if we resist it, thinking that they have scared the North so often with that bugbear that it will do to try it again. This expedient of theirs has been so often tried with success that it makes me think of the way I have sometimes seen a spaniel dog treated. A boy holds up a cracker, and says, "stand up," and the dog stands up; "lie down," and the dog obeys; "roll over," and he does it; "speak," and the dog speaks; "roll over again," and he rolls over. Then the boy puts the cracker in his pocket, to be used for the same purpose another time (laughter).

The South is now demanding the restoration of the slave trade far stronger than it did the annexation of Texas in 1835. It has only to threaten to dissolve the Union, and the North will give it. Another recent issue of the South is the right to hold slaves in the Northern States. That issue is to be decided in the case of the Lemmon slaves, who were set at liberty in the city of New York, by Judge Paine. I was never prouder, fellow-citizens, than of the share I took in the liberation of those slaves. Already, in Pennsylvania, Judge Kane has said that he knew of no law of Pennsylvania that took a man's property away brought from the South; and if there were, it would not be recognised by the Courts of the United States—a decision worthy of Jeffreys, in his blacket days. Shame on the man that can say that.

I tell you, we have got a great deal of work to do in this country. I know the people have conferred upon me the office of Judge. I think they missed it, however, when they did it, for my nature is more progressive than that of most of the old fogies that fill the bench. I believe in Judges having a heart and soul, and don't believe in looking back into the Sixteenth century for all judicial wisdom. We have got a great deal of work to do. When we saw that last act of perfidy, on the part of the South, we felt as if the camel's back was well nigh broken; we felt as if the last support of freedom was taken away. Like Jacob of old, we could have exclaimed, "Me have ye bereaved of my children, Joseph is not, and Simeon is not, and ye will take away Benjamin also. Ye will bring down my gray hairs with sorrow to the grave." So it will be with the North if we submit to these wrongs.

But there is a brighter side to this question. This last act of the South blots out all compacts and challenges us to the fight. The South thinks it has tied our hands, and now it can throw stones at us with impunity. But I think the South is mistaken; the cords that she has bound us with are not so strong as she supposes. I think the time is coming when it will not be so easy to catch slaves—out of Philadelphia. The slave-catchers made their last effort in New York, a year ago, when they seized the brother of Dr. Pennington; I think they will not dare to repeat that act. They succeeded by treachery and falsehood then, which it will not be safe to repeat. The Marshal said, when I went to offer myself as counsel for the slaves, that the trial had taken place, that the slaves had been remanded and had gone, and that they did not want counsel. Believing in the truth of what he said, I was about to go away, when Mrs. Dr. Pennington told me that she believed it was a lie, and that the slaves were up stairs. I told her to go and find them and I would follow her. She tripped lightly up stairs, put her lips to the key-hole of the door, and inquired—"Stephen, are you there?" "Yes," was the response, "who iswith you?" "Mr. Culver," said she, "our lawyer." I then addressed him and asked if he had had a trial. "No," said he, "we don't want any; they are going to send us back." I then went post-haste for a writ of habeas corpus; but when I got it and returned, they had gone. I went back to the Marshal's Office, and said, "You have told us a lie outright; you have given these people no decent hearing. We would have tried, if nothing more, to purchase these poor fellows out of slavery; but if this is the way you are to mete out justice, by denying us the last salvage of the protection of the law, I go not only for pulling your office down, but for battering your head down on your shoulders" (loud cheers). I think that will be the last act of slave-catching in New York.

On the fourth of July last, I had the honour of delivering a speech on the banks of the St. Lawrence, to some 15,000 people. At the conclusion of that speech, said I, "I see here across these blue waters, stretching in the distance, the province of Upper Canada. In that province are concealed 9,000 of my poor crushed countrymen who have fled to Canada for safety. Bear back with you, my friends, who are about to cross over to the other shore, the thanks of fifteen States to your native province. Tell her that we shall honour her to the day of our death, for affording a refuge to the servant that has escaped from his master. And let her know another thing: We are getting not to be afraid of woman's government in our own country, and, any day you say it, we will swap Frank Pierce for your young Queen, and throw in Douglas and Cass to boot" (great laughter).

The remedy, my friends, is in our reach. The truth must be pressed upon the Northern heart. The race of doughfaces must be destroyed. There is danger, however, that the North will not stand firm in the present crisis. A few days after the passage of the Nebraska bill, I met Henry Ward Beecher and asked him if he thought the North would stand firm on this question. Said he, "There is a class of men in the North like the sculpins in Boston harbour; they beat all fish; they will eternally bite whenever you drop in your hook. When I was a boy, I used to catch them, cut off their tails to mark them, and throw them back into the water. And, do you believe, the foolish fellows were sure to get caught when I threw in the book again (laughter). I feel afraid that the North will not stand; there are so many of these sculpins among us" (laughter). I want to see inscribed on the banner of 1856, "Death to doughfaces." Do you know how to kill a doughface? I will tell you. Certain dogs have an ingenious way of killing cats; they seize them by the small of the back and break their spine. Now, if you take away a doughface's office, it is like breaking his back; he has no support, and he will melt like a cabbage plant in a hot forenoon (laughter).

There are thousands who are beginning to count the value of this Union, so that the oft-repeated threat of dissolution is ceasing to have its effect. When I was in Congress, in 1847, a member from Virginia was listening, one day, to a speech of a Northern man on the subject of the Wilmot Proviso. At length, he became very much agitated, and, leaving his seat, he came and sat down by a Southern friend, whose seat was near mine, when he remarked, intending that I should hear him, "I, for one, have listened to this speech long enough; I am in favour of dissolving the Union." "When you leave," said I, "you need not take but six weeks' provision; and you had better leave the door open, so that you can get in easily on your return, for I rather think you will come back, with your negroes at your heels, in double quick time" (laughter). You all remember the reply made by Senator Fessenden to Judge Butler, who repeated the same threat of dissolution to him, on the floor of the Senate; "You need not put it off a single day on our account," said he. This cry of the South that they will sever the Union reminds me of the anecdote of Pat, who was let down by a rope into a well. It was agreed that when Pat kicked the rope, they should draw him up. Pat kicked the rope and they drew him part way up. He kicked again, but they did not answer it, and he was left suspended. He kicked again and again, but to no purpose, until at last, he exclaimed, "Lift me up, be jabbers, or I will cut the rope" (laughter). Let the South cut the rope if they will. The Union is not worth preserving if it is to continue to be a great engine of oppression and of slavery propagandism.

And now, friends, I thank you for your kind attention. It has been a pleasant day for me, for I love to talk to coloured people. And if I render myself unpopular to my Whig friends by it, so be it; I am sorry, but I cannot help it. They never have shut my mouth yet, and they never shall (cheers). When they elected me to Congress, in 1844, said I, "Understand, if there is no other man in Congress who is opposed to slavery, if I find one port-hole through which to fire at slavery, there is one man by the name of Culver who will let slip" (cheers). The only safety for Whigs and all consistent democrats is to take ground on the side of freedom. And to those of you who are working only in a moral way, I throw no obstacle in your way. I am glad on account of your consistency and hearty effort amid scorn and outrage. The day of persecution has passed by, I hope, and we are standing shoulder to shoulder. Mutual forbearance, but no sacrifice of principle, should characterize our efforts in the common cause of freedom and humanity (great cheering).

SPEECH OF MR. GARRISON.

Mr. President, Ladies and Gentlemen: If I had consulted the dictates of prudence, I should not be with you on this occasion. In my own native State, for some days past, I have been labouring under extreme debility, so as to make all effort burdensome, and entire repose greatly to be coveted. Still, I gave you my pledge—impossibilities out of the question—that I would come here, and bear my testimony in behalf of the glorious cause of liberty; and to-day, I want to forget all about sickness. An Abolitionist has no right to talk about being unwell on the First of August. The event which we are here to celebrate is a balsam to the body, a cordial to the mind; and the spirit which enters into sympathy with the emancipated in the isles of the sea is one that must and will forget that it has a body.

After the very able, elaborate and eloquent speech made this forenoon, by Judge Culver, I can only come before you as "a fifth wheel to the coach"; and so I follow rather as a matter of form than on the ground of necessity, and can hardly hope to add anything to the interest which was created by the earnest and intrepid speaker who stood before us to give us his word of testimony and approval.

Mr. President, I am slightly beyond the meridian of life. More than half of my life has been devoted to the anti-slavery enterprise; and whatever remains of that life shall, by the help of God, be consecrated to the same or titular cause. Never, never, never shall I relax one jot or tittle; cease to testify against slavery, so long as there remains in this [illegible] a single slave to curse the soil, or to stain our national escutcheon. I was asked, not a great while ago, by an anti-slavery woman, whether I did not grow weary in this cause, and desire repose. My answer was, and is, and will be to the end—I am tired of slaveholding usurpation and villany; I am tired of doughfaces, time-servers and trimmers; I am weary of blood; I grow sick at heart in view of the horrible oppression which is perpetrated upon millions of my countrymen; but I never grow weary in denouncing them. No! From every fresh encounter with the Slave Power, like Antæus, when he touched his mother earth, I only derive the more strength, resolved never to give up till our jubilee shall come (cheers).

Alas! we are not here to celebrate an American jubilee. Oh, no! there is nothing for us to talk about here, pertaining to our own country, except that which is enough to suffuse our cheek with shame, and to make all the blood in our veins chill within us. There is nothing American about this celebration to-day; it is wholly foreign, to the eternal shame of this Republic; it relates to old England—the mother country, from whom our fathers seceded in "the times that tried men's souls." She has taken the lead in the great and God-like work of human enfranchisement; while we, as a nation, are still dabbling in human blood, forging fetters, manufacturing yokes, and lengthening the cords and strengthening the stakes of slavery. West India Emancipation brings us here to-day; thank God for that! Though we may not rejoice over the liberation of our own slaves, yet we may and do rejoice that the slaves in the isles of the sea have been transformed, by the magic touch of liberty, into human beings, and clothed with God-given rights, and are now reposing in peace and safety under the flag of old England. It is easy enough for us to celebrate the great event which has called us together. But, oh! how long-protracted and severe the struggle which preceded the victory! All honour to the glorious men and women who, through evil and through good report, year after year, from the youthful days of the sainted Clarkson and the immortal Wilberforce, down to the year of jubilee, never relaxed their efforts! What perseverance, what courage, what self-denial, what vigilance, what faith in God, what labour, "in season and out of season," contending with the colossal power of the West India oligarchy, at home as well as abroad—the few against the many—the unknown and uninfluential rising up, and undertaking to overthrow a system which had been growing for centuries—grappling with the mercantile interest, the Established Church, the aristocracy, and even with the throne itself—and having no other instrument in their hands than the truth of the everlasting God, which never yet was vanquished in any conflict with the Devil! Gratitude to the memories of Wilberforce, and Clarkson, and Sharpe, and Macaulay, and Buxton, and Thompson. Gratitude to the less noted men and women, throughout England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales, who gave to this cause, in the hour of extreme danger and peril, all that could be given by hearts warmed by love to God and love to man! We never can forget them; they shall be remembered to the latest posterity.

In view of a result like this, let no man ever doubt that there is a God; that truth is immortal and invincible, and only needs sufficient time to be victorious. It was not the moneyed interest, nor the aristocracy, nor the church, nor the clergy, that took up the cause of the West India slave; but it was the comparatively humble and obscure—men and women without money, power or station—but with hearts full of generous sympathy for the oppressed, and deeply baptized into the spirit of primitive Christianity. These, looking up to God, and nowhere else—relying upon the Eternal Arm, and upon nothing else—remembering the Divine promise, that, in such a conflict, "one shall chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight"—began and consummated the mighty work; and we are assembled, to-day, to celebrate their triumph.

Where, now, are the West India planters? They affected to laugh to scorn all opposition, and to be lifted above all human contingencies. They emancipate their slaves! Never! The Abolitionists of England put down their slave system! Never! Well, where are they to-day? With not a slave in their possession! And where are the victims of their cruel oppression? Rejoicing, to-day, as human beings made free according to the law and will of God; and mingling their songs with ours, in commemoration of their great deliverance.

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform;
He plants his footsteps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm.

"Blind unbelief is sure to err,
And scan his works in vain;
God is his own interpreter,
And He will make it plain."

Will make it plain? Ay, He has made it plain to-day! There is no darkness here; it is all sun-light. There is no darkness in those isles of the sea; the light of heaven is streaming down upon a ransomed people. The power of the oppressor has disappeared from the earth, so far as they are concerned; and they stand "redeemed, regenerated and disenthralled by the irresistible genius of Universal Emancipation." To whom, then, is the praise to be given? "Not unto us, not unto us." I know the sainted spirits of Clarkson and Wilberforce, and all who laboured to snap the chains asunder, will say—"Not unto us, but unto thee, O Lord, be the praise and glory forever, that the galling yoke has been broken, and the oppressed set free." And, let the shout go up from this beautiful grove, and wherever this day is celebrated, "Glory to God, who, by His own almighty energy and power, has brought this wonderful event to pass!"

I have spoken of the opposition to the anti-slavery cause in England, which the early friends of the slave encountered. It was not an opposition so malignant and diabolical as that which we have had to encounter, and are still encountering, in our own land. It was sufficiently formidable, however, to try the faith and courage of the strongest and boldest; because from the beginning almost to the end of the struggle, all the powers of the home Government, as well as the combined interests of the Colonies, were against the movement.

And what were the pleas advanced to justify West India slavery? I will rapidly rehearse some of them; and you will see, as in a mirror, that they were precisely such as are now put forth against the anti-slavery movement in our own country.

In the first place, the West India planters said to the Abolitionists of England, "Mind your own business! Meddle not with matters which do not concern you!" "It is our business," they replied, "to cry aloud against bloody oppression; and woe be to us, and to you, if we refrain from bearing our testimony!" The same objection is brought against us by the slaveholders at the South. "Vile intermeddlers and mischievous busybodies, attend to your own affairs! Look at home!" Our reply is—and becomes the accomplice of the tyrant.

"He who allows oppression shares the crime,"

Next, the West India planters said, "Our slaves are better off than they would be in a state of freedom." Better off to have no rights than to have all rights! Better off to have a tyrannical master over them than to have the eternal God! Better off to have no compensation for service and long protracted toil than to be well paid, and to work without the stimulus of the lash! Better off to have no power to read and write than to be in possession of the spelling-book, the Bible, and the means of knowledge! Better off to have chains around the body which God made to be sacred from harm, and to glorify him forever, than to have the limbs free as the birds of the air! Such is the logic of slavery! It belongs to Bedlam. There never was a sane argument put forth against liberty. There are various kinds of insanity; and he who maintains that God has made one man to be the property of another is a madman. There is not a sane man in the universe who does not know that all slaveholding is damnable villany. They who justify chattel slavery, as compatible with justice and humanity, ought to have straight jackets put upon them, if anybody ought; they cannot be safely trusted at large; they are men bereft of man as distinguished from a beast.

Next, it was said that immediate emancipation was the wildest proposition conceivable; the slaves ought first to be prepared for freedom; to "turn them loose" at once would be destruction to all concerned. As if God ever made a human being not prepared for freedom! As if a being "made a little lower than the angels" was ever qualified for slavery!

Again, the panters said that the blacks were an inferior race, and that it was the will of God that the superior should govern and control the inferior. Inferior? Inferior in what? Where has the experiment ever been fairly made, under equal circumstances, and the result has not always been exceedingly honourable to the coloured man, in competition with the white man? No, it is not for the basest of tyrants to talk about the inferiority of any portion of the rational creatures of God. If there is an exception among mankind, they, of all men, constitute that exception.

Well, they had a religious objection to emancipation; and I think you will recognise it as one which is not unfrequently urged upon us. "Cursed be Canaan; a servant of servants shall he be unto his brethren." Moreover, "Paul sent Onesimus back to Philemon"; therefore, the Old and New Testament settled it, that West India slavery was of God, and he was an infidel who dared to raise his voice against it! I think we have heard the same justification of slavery on our own soil. Why, no longer ago than May last, our friend Charles Sumner felt it to be exceedingly important, in a long, elaborate and most eloquent speech, delivered in New York, to prove that the curse pronounced upon Canaan did not make out exactly such a case for the slaveholders of our country as they desired; and that it was a gross blunder to suppose that Paul sent back Onesimus to be again the slave of Philemon. And this in the presence of a people holding it to be a self-evident truth that all men are endowed by their Creator with an inalienable right to liberty!

Again, it was urged that blood would flow like water, if emancipation should take place; that the throats of the planters would assuredly be cut, for the slaves constituted an overwhelming majority. To this the anti-slavery party replied, "It is a monstrous hallucination of the mind! Your slaves do not attempt to cut your throats now, even though you lacerate and starve them, work them without wages, separate wife from husband, and sell their children on the auction block. They have borne these cruelties with unparalleled forbearance, looking unto God for deliverance. Will they be disposed to cut your throats when you cease flogging them and burning their flesh with red-hot branding irons? Will they murder you, because you have restored to them their children, and are no longer disposed to traffic in their bodies and souls? It is the height of insanity; there is no danger."

Again, it was said that the slaves would not work if they were emancipated; hence, to cure their indolence, it was right and proper to keep them in bondage. The reply was, "It is for the slaves, not for you, to determine whether they will work or not. If your objection be a valid one, it proves—inasmuch as you, the planters, scorn to do any work, and are the laziest of the lazy, subsisting entirely on the labours of others—that you, of all persons in the world, ought to be enslaved." And it was very conclusive reasoning.

Their next device was to denounce the English Abolitionists as incendiaries, fanatics and infidels. Wilberforce was branded as "a hoary-headed traitor," up to a late period in his life. If he, or Clarkson, or Buxton, could have been caught in the Colonies, the power of the British Government would not have been sufficient to protect them from the murderous rage of the planters. Now, the busts of these distinguished philanthropists are seen in the Colonies, as worthy of all honour. So great has been the change wrought by the beneficent act of emancipation!

There was another objection to emancipation, and a very singular one, coming from slaveholders. They said, "If emancipation takes place, then AMALGAMATION will follow"—i. e. their sons would be for having none but black wives! A fine compliment, indeed, to the beauty and attractiveness of black women, as compared with those of white women! Amalgamation! Why, the slaveholder would no sooner give up his chance for amalgamation than he would give up his life; there is no adjunct of the slave system he so much fancies as amalgamation. Where do all the coloured population of our country come from? Certainly not come from Africa! This infinite variety in the shades of complexion everywhere tells the story of slaveholding violence and lust. O, the audacity of slaveholders! to dare to stand up and denounce a state of freedom as tending to amalgamation, when the very first act of slavery is to ABOLISH THE MARRIAGE INSTITUTION, for the purpose of gratifying the hellish lust of the master, without fear or restraint! It is debauchery and rape on a colossal scale. Ah! we dare not lift that curtain and reveal to you all the horrors of the secret chamber. The pollutions of Sodom and Gomorrah all legalized and enforced under the lash, and at the point of the bowie-knife!

Next, the planters pleaded that the true way of abolishing slavery was to do it gradually. They did not say when they would cease being slaveholders. They said, not to-day, not to-morrow, but at some indefinite period. The English Abolitionists insisted upon their naming a time, but in vain. It was like the story told of Charles James Fox, the British statesman, who was notorious for getting into debt and never paying. A certain Jew, named Solomon, to whom he was owing a large sum, had called repeatedly upon him for his money, but Fox told him he could not pay him then—he must call again. "No," said Solomon, whose mind was at last made up to the sticking-point, "I have come resolved never to leave your house until you tell me on what day I shall certainly have the money." "Well, Solomon," said Fox, "I will try and set a day"—and after walking backwards and forwards in his room, and rubbing his forehead, he said, "Solomon, I have concluded upon a day when we will settle. I have thought of the day of judgment; but as that is likely to be rather a busy day with both of us, suppose we say the day after" (laughter). So it was with the slaveholders of the West Indies; and so it is with the slaveholders of our own country. Not to-day, nor to-morrow, but the day after the day of judgment. Ah! there is no day after the day of judgment for slaveholders in any part of the world!

Again, the planters said, "Do you mean to rob us of our property—to strike down vested rights? Give us compensation—full, entire compensation. Those slaves we have inherited, or bought with our money; and now you talk of taking them from us, and giving us nothing in return. It is the height of injustice, it is downright robbery." "No," said the English Abolitionists, "man never yet was rightfully the property of man. You knew when you bought or inherited your slaves that you had no moral right to hold them in bondage. You invested your money at a venture, and saw your own risk. It is now time for the slave to have his freedom, a compensation should be given to him as a wronged and outraged man. Your vested rights we pronounce, in the name of the God of justice, vested wrongs."

Finally, they said, "If slavery be abolished, there will be less sugar grown, and chaos will come again." And so they wanted to sweeten the objection as much as possible, to make it go down! The danger of emancipation—amalgamation—vested rights—Onesimus and the curse upon Canaan—all were forgotten! "We shall have less sugar," was the climax of their objections. But, for the sake of logical consistency, the argument should have been, there will be no sugar at all; for nobody was going to be left alive to grow sugar, or anything else, so far as the white population were concerned.

But let us take this sugar argument, which our pro-slavery opponents "roll as a sweet morsel under their tongues," and we will see how easily it can be dissolved. Well, then, there is less sugar grown since emancipation. So be it; but, as an effect, thank God, there is no more unrequited toil! Less sugar, but no coerced pollution! Less sugar, but no longer any brutal degradation! Less sugar, but no more fetters, yokes, thumb-screws and branding-irons! Less sugar, but no longer any slave-drivers to scourge the backs of men, women and children! Less sugar, but no longer any traffic in human flesh! Less sugar, but no more slave insurrections or dread of them! Why, Mr. President, so destructive to human life was slavery in the West Indies, during its continuance, that, instead of there being any natural increase of the slaves, there was a constant and most frightful decrease; so that, in time, the entire population would have been annihilated, but for constant supplies from the coast of Africa. The decrease was at the rate of five or six thousand a year. Less sugar, but no longer any slave code with all its bloody atrocities! Allow me to refresh your memories a moment in regard to that code, as it was administered in the Mauritius, for example:

"Slaves going out, after the retreat has beat, without a light and a license, shall be flogged, and put to a month's labour on the public works.

"Slaves harbouring slaves shall be flogged; whites and free blacks doing so shall be heavily fined; and if the free blacks cannot pay the fine, they shall be sold.

"Slaves belonging to different masters, assembling together by day or night, whether at their master's houses, in high roads, or remote places, shall be flogged and branded with the fleur-de-lys; or, on frequent repetition of the offence, may suffer DEATH at the discretion of the judge.

"A slave striking his master or mistress, or their children, and causing a wound, shall suffer DEATH.

"Robberies by a slave shall be punished, as the case may require, with flogging and branding, or DEATH.

"A fugitive slave, absent a month after being denounced, shall have his ears cut off, and be branded with a fleur-de-lys; if absent a second time, for the same space, his hamstrings shall be cut, and he shall again be branded; if a third time, he shall suffer DEATH."

Where now is that bloody code? Gone to its own place, the bottomless pit. Less sugar, but freedom at all hours of the night—the right of hospitality secured—the right to assemble together by day or by night, unquestioned—the right of self-defence admitted and secured—crime punished, not with reference to the complexion of the criminal, but according to its nature. Less sugar, but no more ears to be cut off—no more being branded with a fleur-de-lys—no more having the hamstrings cut, or being put to death, for a month's absence from the plantation! What an exchange!

See what cruelties were once perpetrated with impunity upon the wretched victims of West India slavery! Here is an illustration:

"Kate (who was owned by Henry and Helen Moss, in the Bahamas), was a domestic slave, and was stated to have been guilty of theft; she was also accused of disobedience, in refusing to mend her clothes and do her work, and this was the more immediate cause of her punishment. On the 22d of July, 1826, she was confined in the stocks, and she was not released till the 8th of August following, being a period of seventeen days. The stocks were so constructed, that she could not sit up and lie down at pleasure, and she remained in them night and day. During this period, she was repeatedly flogged, one of the overseers thinks about six times, and red pepper was rubbed upon her eyes to prevent her sleeping. Tasks were given her which, in the opinion of the overseer, she was incapable of performing; sometimes because they were beyond her power, at other times because she could not see to do them on account of the pepper having been rubbed on her eyes; and she was flogged for failing to accomplish these tasks. It is in evidence, that on one of the days of Kate's confinement, she complained of fever, and that one of the floggings which she received was the day after she made this complaint. When she was taken out of the stocks, she appeared to be cramped, and was then again flogged. The very day of her release, she was sent to field labour (though heretofore a house servant), and on the evening of the third day ensuing, was brought before her owners as being ill and refusing to work, and she then again complained of having had fever. The driver took her to the negro-house, and again flogged her; though this time, apparently, without orders from her owners to do so. In the morning, at seven o'clock, she was taken to work in the field, where she died at noon."

Here is the case of the Rev. G. W. Bridges, of St. Anne's, and his slave, Kitty Hilton, in May, 1829:

"Bridges had ordered the girl to get a turkey for dinner, expecting a friend to dine. In the course of the day, he learnt that this friend could not come. He called the girl, and asked her what was for dinner; she replied, 'the turkey.' He immediately said, accompanying his words with a blow, 'You d—— b——, who told you to get a turkey?' The blow blackened both the girl's eyes, and set her nose in a flood of blood. The poor creature again said, 'Massa, it was the last thing you told me to do this morning.' He immediately called two men to cut bamboo rods, and point them. She was then stripped of every article of dress, tied up by the hands, her toes barely touching the ground, and flogged until the back part of her, from the shoulders down to the calves of her legs was one mass of lacerated flesh and gore. In this state, she was locked up, but made her escape in the night, in a state of nudity, to a magistrate, who had a court convened to consider the case, which refused to prosecute Bridges, by a vote of 14 to 4, notwithstanding his acknowledgment that he had caused her to be three severely punished for her insolence."

Read the following advertisements, as published in the Royal Gazette of Jamaica, March 13, 1830, being descriptions of apprehended runaway slaves:

"George, a Mungola, 5 feet 5 inches; marked apparently TA on shoulders; wears whiskers; has country marks down his belly; and large sores on the right foot.

"George Robert, a young creole negro man, 5 feet 7 1-2 inches; marked apparently PM on left, and WP on right shoulder, and has two scars on left breast.

"Elizabeth Baker Cooper, alias Mary Munro, a yellow skin creole woman, 4 feet 11 1-2 inches; marked MI on shoulders.

"George, alias John Brown, a young creole negro man, 5 feet 5 1-2 inches; marked PL (in one), diamond on top, twice on left and once on right shoulder, and the same marks on his breast.

"Hamlet, alias William Maxwell, a creole, 5 feet 3 inches; the first joint of the fouth right finger is lost; has scars on forehead, and old bruises on shins.

"Eliza Carr, a fair sambo, 5 feet 5 inches; stout made; marked apparently YP on right shoulder; has marks of a public flogging on shoulders, a scar under her chin, one above her upper lip on the left side, and one on her left inner ancle."

Less sugar, but no more putting women under the lash, or in the stocks, no more rubbing the eyes with pepper, no more branding the alphabet into the living flesh! Less sugar? Gracious God! what inhuman monsters must they be who make this outcry! They can see nothing beautiful, grand, glorious—nothing beneficent or worthy of thanksgiving—in the overthrow of such a system! Their fiendish yell is still the same—"Less sugar!" Again, I say, be it so; but there are no more burnings of chapels and banishing of missionaries! Before emancipation took place, the planters rose up against all the missionaries, set fire to their chapels or pulled them down, destroyed property to the amount of 23,255 pounds sterling. Some of the missionaries were put in loathsome dungeons, where two of their number died; the rest were expelled from the Colonies, and had to take refuge in the mother country for safety. It was only when they got to England, and proclaimed in the hearing of the people, that the Gospel of Christ could not be preached while slavery existed in the Colonies, and that they must either stop sending missionaries or combine to put down that atheistical system, that the religious sentiment of the country rose up in its strength and smote slavery to the dust. And that is the deed we are here to rejoice over to-day. A similar religious proscription has already commenced in our own country. In Missouri, the Ministers of the Methodist Church North are being driven out of their pulpits by the bowie-knife and the revolver—not because they are Abolitionists, but because they are attached to the Northern wing of that church. And this spirit will prevail more and more. We must prepare ourselves to hear of a speedy uprising against the preachers of the Gospel in the South, who will not openly defend slavery as a divinely instituted system; and when that time comes, I trust it will have the same effect upon the religious people of the North as it had upon the people of Great Britain.

What a wonderful change it is in the West India Islands!

"'Tis somewhat like the burst from death to life,
From the grave's cerements to the robes of heaven!"

It is the most interesting, thrilling and marvellous transaction that the world has ever witnessed. Hark! the cry again comes up all over our country, "There is less sugar exported!" No matter—what sugar is exported is clean and pure, and has no taint of blood upon it. One pound of it outweighs all that was formerly raised in the Colonies (cheers). Less sugar—but they have got schools, voluntary industry, the Bible, remuneration for labour, the marriage institution, a free Gospel, genius and talent and moral worth developing on the right hand and on the left, coloured lawyers, coloured merchants, coloured physicians, coloured divines, coloured artists, coloured legislators, equal rights for all, and a slave population transformed into British subjects, protected by British law. I think the sugar argument must kick the beam. I go for less sugar, and all the blessings I have enumerated as an equivalent (cheers).

But a word in regard to this sugar question. There is not less sugar raised; it is a pro-slavery lie. There is somewhat less exported; but he takes a very superficial view of this question, who looks merely at the quantity exported; for, remember, when the slaves were under the lash, all the sugar that was raised was in the hands of planters, and the slaves, of course, were not consumers. It was a monopoly; the masters took all for their own use and for exportation. Remember that there are nearly a million of consumers of sugar in the Colonies, because they are all now in a state of freedom. If the export is raise it; and the imports (the true criterion of prosperity) are much greater.

Now, we need not specially concern ourselves about the working of men who have motives to inspire them to labour. Almighty God has done his work very well, and we cannot mend it. If men will be lazy in a state of freedom it is no argument for tyranny; it does not justify making a man a beast—turning a human being into a thing. No; but this is the Divine arrangement and the Divine penalty: If a man will not work, neither shall he eat (cheers). He who will be idle will find out that "Jordan is a hard road to travel" (laughter). Now, men, it is affirmed, will not work as freemen, but they will work as slaves! Well, they did work as slaves in the colonies, after a fashion—and the slave's fashion is a very poor one. I think I should make a very poor labourer as a slave. I should be inclined to work just as little as possible, and do it about as badly as I could, for it would make me somewhat "ugly" (laughter). They worked by having somebody to DRIVE them. What a terrible thing is a DRIVER! Oh, that infernal lash! I have sometimes tried to think of having my body cut up by the lash of the slave-driver—or that of my wife, or my daughter, or any of my children. It is impossible for language to describe the torture. There may be those within the sound of my voice who have experienced it, all in their own persons, or seen the lash applied to the bodies of men, women and children, until the blood ran like a stream to the ground. It was the lash which induced the slaves to work; it is the cash which induces a freeman to put forth his energies. It is better substitute the letter c for the letter L—CASH for LASH. Some shrewd observer has said, that we can tell whether a mechanic is at work by the day or by the job, by only listening to the stroke of his hammer. If it is by the day, it goes thus: by—the—day; if it is by the job, it goes "in double quick time," by the job, job, job—by the job, job, job (laughter); because the sooner the job is done, the sooner the man gets ready for another. Hence, if anybody wants a thing done well and quickly, he employs a man to do it by the job. That is human nature, and the colour of the skin does not alter the fact at all. Why, you can make a donkey work all the better, if you will only stick before his nose a bunch of carrots; if a man could make his horse understand when he said to him, "I tell you what it is, Billy, if you will only put on the steam, you shall have an extra peck of oats at the end of our jaunt," the horse would not need the stimulus of the whip. It is horse nature, as well as human nature; the only difference is, the horse cannot understand anything about promises in regard to oats, and so the whip has to be used. But the case is different with rational beings. Man wants to know what he is going to be paid, and if he is sure of an adequate reward, whether he be as black as sixteen midnights concentrated, or as white as the driven snow, he works willingly.

Mr. President, the manner in which the slaves received their freedom in the West Indies was alluded to by our friend (Judge Culver), this morning. If there be any one here who has not read that account, I hope he will seize the first opportunity to inform his mind on that subject. It is enough to fill all hearts with admiration, joy, thanksgiving and wonder. There never was such a people, it seems to me, as the slaves in those islands. Talk about the inferiority of the coloured race! The manner in which they received the boon of freedom puts an end forever to all the calumnies circulated against the African race. Before God, I do not believe, if the white people had been kept in slavery as the coloured people have been, and had received their freedom in the same way, they would have gone through the process as peaceably and commendably as the slaves in the West Indies. It was almost a miraculous change; yet, instead of tumult and noise, violence and commotion—instead of the emancipated slave saying to the master, "You villain, I am now a man; I remember the wife you sold from me, the children you tore away from my arms; I remember the scourge you put upon my back; I have got the marks of the branding-iron upon my body; I now mean to have justice and sweet revenge"—instead of anything like this, the slaves were found in their temples of worship, making it a religious observance unto the Lord; offering up their prayers and thanksgivings to God, for the great boon which had been vouchsafed to them. How differently we observe the Fourth of July! Compare the two—the 1st of August in the West Indies, and the 4th of July in the United States! We, "an enlightened, educated and religious people," celebrate our national anniversary by burning powder, firing cannon, and a shameless indulgence of dissipation in a thousand ways. We sink beneath the emancipated slaves of Jamaica, ought of sight.

The results of emancipation all over the world, under all circumstances whatever, have been uniformly satisfactory. I will not trespass upon your time, though I have any amount of documentary evidence here, to confirm what I say. I shall say nothing which cannot be confirmed by just such evidence. Wherever this experiment has been made, on a small or large scale, there it has invariably worked well. There never has been a single drop of blood shed, nor any violence done. The boon of freedom has always been gratefully and peaceably accepted on the part of the oppressed. The work has been a work of righteousness and peace.

The statistics which I have here, but which I will not trespass upon your time to read, show that before slavery was abolished, while the masters were crying out that the slaves would not work if emancipated, their own slaves were working on a promise of being set free, if they paid a large price for it by extra toil; and it appears that thousands and tens of thousands of pounds were paid by the slaves themselves for their own redempton, or that of some of their number; though the only time allowed them to earn their pittance was the Sabbath day. But so industrious and expert were they on that single day, that they not only supplied their own wants, but they raised, as individuals, thousands of pounds to secure their personal freedom.

I must refer to one other objection. The hue-and-cry, before emancipation, was, that all the estates would be rendered bankrupt by that act; and now, from New Orleans to Eastport, American journals are ready to inculcate the lying statement, that everything in the West Indies is going to ruin. One would think that, before freedom came, the West India planters had never known hard times; that slavery always sailed on an unruffled sea; that slave-driving and cradle-plundering made excellent pickings; that the slaveholders were always flush, in their pecuniary affairs. What are the historical facts? Why, this—that, while slavery has existed, instead of being always productive, and leading to great riches, the broad current has been all the way downward. Let me make a single reference to the statistics. In the course of twenty years, 177 estates in Jamaica were sold for the payment of debts. That was under the regime of the Slave Power, notwithstanding the enormous bounties given to it by the home government. [Mr. Garrison here gave several other important statistical facts, all to the same purport.]

You see, therefore, that, in slavery, the estates were going down to irretrievable bankruptcy; and if you want to know why $100,000,000 were paid as compensation for the liberation of the slaves, it was to pay off the bankers of England, and others who had mortgages for large sums upon the West India estates. A vast amount of that money never reached the West Indies at all, but remained at home; and this was the grand secret of the payment of the hundred million of dollars.

Now, my friends, I come to our own country. Oh, the guilt of this nation! After an experiment like this; after all the promises of God in regard to what shall come of right action; after all our political and religious professions, that we believe in human freedom, in God-given rights, and that we are believers in the gospel of Jesus Christ; after all these great experiments have been wrought out with invariable success, so as to take away all pretext for doubt or unbelief, we not only refuse to follow the glorious examples thus set to us, but we become more frantic in support of slavery, and more determined that liberty shall never be proclaimed throughout all this land unto all the inhabitants thereof. Yes, the guilt of this nation goes up to heaven, and reaches down to hell. No people have ever had such light; none have ever made such professions; none have ever so deeply sinned against God and against man. The clouds are heavy over our heads; the judgments are impending; the God who overthrew Pharaoh and his host in the Red Sea is the same who sits on his throne in the Universe, and there is no escaping the eternal law, that as a nation sows, so shall it also reap. And rely upon it, though we may fancy our nation to be strong beyond all the powers of the earth; though we point to our prosperity as an evidence that all is well; though we glory in our army and navy, and in our ability to meet all danger, it is all in vain. If there is nothing beneath the skies with which we cannot successfully cope, there is One who sitteth upon the throne of the Universe, who has infinite power, and He can take up this nation and dash it in pieces as a potter's vessel is broken, and He will do it if the nation refuses to repent. The cup will in due time be put to our own lips. We have shed innocent blood long enough; we have outraged the defenceless coloured population long enough; and God calls upon us to forbear and repent, that his judgments may not come upon us.

And is there any hope? I confess to you that my heart is heavy as lead within me. I do not despair of the triumph of the truth. The slaves in our country are to be set free—that is as certain as that man is man, and God is God. Slavery is doomed, let this country do what it may. But will it go down peaceably? Will the nation relax its grasp willingly? Will it hear the warning voice, and obey the Divine command? Or will it go on, and add iniquity to iniquity, and multiply slaves for the auction-block, and extend the slave system, until its doom is irrevocably sealed? This is the question. I know that our success in the anti-slavery cause has been extraordinary, within the last quarter of a century; I know that, having nothing but the simple truth to begin with, with all that is wealthy, and mighty, and powerful, in Church and State combined against us, our march has been right onward. And yet there is such a thing as a nation sinning away its day of grace, so that it is not possible for it to recover itself. There has never yet been made a direct and true issue by the North against slavery. Every thing has been and is in the spirit of compromise. Our eloquent friend, Judge Culver, pointed out the successive strides of the Slave Power ever since the organization of the government. All these steps have been legitimate, not accidental. In one half of the country, we have lost our right of speech; the liberty of conscience is cloven down; editors are driven into exile, and their presses destroyed; the Gospel is fettered, and its mouth-piece gagged; and all compacts and agreements are perfidiously overturned. All this is the legitimate fruit of the tree; and unless we lay the ax at the root of the tree, and cut it down, and give it to the consuming fire, we shall do nothing—we are lost. I thank God for any kind of opposition to slavery, and am glad that any issue is raised; and I will respect every honest effort in behalf of freedom. But until we cease to shake hands religiously, politically and governmentally with the South, and declare the Union to be at an end, I believe we can do nothing even against the encroachments of the Slave Power upon our rights. When will the people of the North see that it is not possible for liberty and slavery to commingle, or for a true Union to be formed between freemen and slaveholders. Between those who oppress and the oppressed, no concord is possible. This Union—it is a lie, an imposture, "a covenant with death, and an agreement with hell;" and our first business is, to seek its utter overthrow. In this Union, there are three million and a half of slaves, clanking their chains on the 1st of August, 1855. Let that Union be accursed! Look at the awful compromises of the Constitution, by which that instrument is saturated with the blood of the slave! But even if every word of it were unexceptionable, the fact would be none the less palpable, that it is not a question of parchment, but of moral possibilities. "How can two walk together, except they are agreed?" We are against slavery. The slaveholders say to us, "If we catch you south of Mason and Dixon's line, we will lynch you." They declare that no man shall be put into office, who does not go for everlasting and universal slavery. Judge Culver told us that no man could be anything under this Government who did not bow down and do homage to the Slave Power. He is right, and it will be so to the end. How great the insanity of the North! Like Samson, it has foolishly revealed the secret of its strength, ay, and the source of its weakness; and the Philistines of the South have taken it captive, put out our eyes, and make it grind in the prison-house for them; and if, at last, it shall arise in its returning strength, it will be to feel for the pillars of this heaven-accursed Union, and bring it to the ground. Samson told Delilah that if she should cut off his locks, he would be weak as other men. Then, said the Philistines, we know where the secret of his strength lies; and the deed was done. O, the folly and infatuation of the people of the North! For sixty-eight years we have been telling the slaveholders that we consider the preservation of the American Union paramount to all other considerations! "Do what you will for the extension of slavery, or the subversion of our own rights, there is one thing we mean to do, and that is, always to stand by the Union! For that, we will give up everything, conscience, self-respect, manhood, liberty, all! "We ask nothing more," say the slaveholders; "that is a carte blanc in our hands to wield against you with omnipotent effect; it is all we want." know. We will have the Fugitive Slave bill. We kn you will wince, and remonstrate, and threaten; but w have only to crack the whip of disunion over your head to bring you down on your knees at once. We will repeal the Missouri Compromise. We expect you to rav and resist; but you will yield the point, like whipped spaniels, when we threaten to dissolve the Union. You have agreed that, to save the Union, you will b submissive to the end." And so, all over the North, ther is not a political party that does not say, "We are for th Union." I am sorry Charles Sumner goes for the Union I say it with all respect and esteem for him. But it is a fatal position, let who will take it. The new "fusion" or "republican" party reiterates the cry of the South. "The Union, it must and shall be preserved." I tell you that this is the betrayal of liberty into the hands of the Philistines. Talk about restoring the Missouri Compro mise! As well talk of causing the sun and moon to stan still! Talk of repealing the Fugitive Slave bill! "Whe the sky falls, we will catch larks." Talk about stoppin the progress of slavery, and of saving Nebraska an Kansas! I tell you, the fate of Nebraska and Kansa was sealed the first hour Stephen Arnold Douglas con sented to play his perfidious part. I hold that any ma who talks of a Union with slaveholders, such as the prescribe, has no right to call himself a friend of the slav In becoming an Abolitionist, I pledged myself to stan by the side of the slave, and make his case my own; and I will not support a Constitution from which he is excluded. I will go in for no Union in which he is doomed to clank his fetters. I will give allegiance to no Government which does not protect his right with my own. Therefore I stand outside of this Government, and by the help of God, I mean to effect its overthrow. This seems to me to be the only consistent course to be taken "No Union with slaveholders!" Why? Because they will have no Union with us, unless we will join in the villainy. I do not know what anti-slavery men mean by saying they are opposed to slavery, and yet for preserving the Union The coloured man who glorifies the Union which makes him an outlaw, is beside himself. Our first duty is to pronounce the American Union accursed of God—to arraign every man who supports it, and tell him as Jesus told the rich young man in the Gospel, that whatever else he may have done, one thing he yet lacketh: he must give up his support of the Union. Will continue the experiment any longer? It is all madness and delusion; let this slaveholding Union go; and when it goes, I tell you, slavery will go down with it. A Judge Culver told the Southern member of Congress they had better leave the door pretty wide open when they separate from the North, for they will soon be running back, with their slaves at their heels, chasing them at the point of the bayonet. Whatever stands in the way of freedom, I am for its overthrow. If it is the Church, then I pronounce the Church to be the synagogue of Satan. If it is the Clergy, I denounce them as wolves in sheep's clothing. The slaveholders are powerless without us. It

National Anti-Slavery Standard.

WITHOUT CONCEALMENT—WITHOUT COMPROMISE.

NEW YORK, SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1855.

FIRST OF AUGUST.

CELEBRATION AT MORRIS'S GROVE.

OUR readers will require no apology from us for devoting so much of our space to Mr. Burr's admirable report of the speeches of Messrs. CULVER, GARRISON and MCKIM, at the Pic-Nic Celebration of the First of August, by the New York Anti-Slavery Society—speeches worthy alike of the men that uttered them, of the occasion that called them forth, and the cause whose claims they so earnestly and eloquently set forth. It was the first time that a meeting of Old School Abolitionists had been honoured by the presence and cooperation of Judge CULVER, and we believe we express the unanimous sentiment of those who heard him when we say that his speech was characterized by sound argument, ready wit, manly boldness, a philanthropic spirit, and a fearless devotion to the cause of impartial liberty. While he did not conceal the fact that he differed in opinion, on some points, from radical Abolitionists, he yet expressed his hearty respect for them on account of their unswerving fidelity to their own convictions, their unflagging zeal, and their unselfish devotion to the cause; and he declared himself willing to encounter any reproach which politicians of any party might heap upon his head on account of his appearance on the anti-slavery platform. We commend his address to the careful attention of all our readers.

The Celebration was, we believe, a source of heartfelt enjoyment to all who took part in it. The fine weather, the beautiful grove, the convenience of all the arrangements, and the fraternal spirit that reigned apparently in every heart, conspired to make the occasion all that the Society could have reasonably anticipated.

CELEBRATION AT ABINGTON.

The Anniversary of British West India Emancipation was celebrated in the beautiful Grove at Abington, by the Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society. After nine or ten successive days, on each of which more or less rain fell, thereby rendering each one unsuitable for meetings in the open air, the FIRST OF AUGUST dawned auspiciously, and proved to be one of the most delightful days of the year. There was a numerous attendance from various parts of the State, including a large number of the tried friends of our cause. The meeting was called to order by Francis Jackson, Esq. Edmund Quincy, Esq., was chosen to preside on the occasion, and Samuel May, Jr., and J. M. W. Yerrinton appointed Secretaries. After performing several well-executed pieces of music, the Abington Band played, by special request, the British National Anthem, God save the Queen.

Mr. Quincy, on taking the chair, made an able and pertinent introductory speech, with reference to the labours, trials and successes of the British Abolitionists, and showing how coincident they were with those that have marked the course of the American Abolitionists. The lesson was a most instructive and cheering one. He was followed by Rev. Andrew T. Foss, who spoke of the relations of the American Church to slavery, and showed it to be organically pro-slavery. Charles L. Remond was the next speaker. He spoke of the demoralizing influences of slavery upon the white as well as upon the coloured population, and therefore the anti-slavery struggle was emphatically for universal emancipation. A recess was then taken until 2 o'clock.

At the afternoon session, the first speaker was J. B. Swasey, Esq., of Newburyport. As a lawyer, he was forced to admit the pro-slavery character of the United States Constitution, and therefore its incompatibility with freedom. He argued in favour of a Convention of the free States, to discuss the requirements of that instrument in regard to slavery, and to take such steps as duty and the highest expediency might seem to require.

Wendell Phillips next took the platform, and was most warmly applauded. He agreed with Mr. Swasey, touching the importance of the constitutional question, and said that individual come-outism from Church and State was the most effective method of revolutionizing the country and abolishing the slave system. He referred to the recent infamous conduct of Judge Kane, and regarded it as the settled purpose of the South to make slaveholding lawful in every part of the country, State Constitutions and laws to the contrary notwithstanding.

Rev. James Freeman Clarke, of Boston, regarded this as a peculiarly thrilling anniversary, and in the results of West India Emancipation said a most satisfactory refutation of all the popular objections to the immediate abolition of slavery in our own land had been found.

Mr. Swasey asked leave to add a few words, occasioned by the speech of Mr. Phillips. In the absence of Mr. P., Mr. Quincy made a few explanatory remarks.

Samuel May, Jr., made the concluding speech, upon the late extraordinary letter of Rev. Dr. Breckinridge, of Kentucky, to Hon. Charles Sumner.

A collection of about $70, to pay expenses and in aid of the cause, was received by the Finance Committee. In addition to this sum, $26 were collected in aid of Cecelia Allen, once a slave in Kentucky, and now soliciting means to purchase her two daughters still held as slaves.

At about 5 1-2 o'clock, after a "well-spent day," the meeting adjourned.

CELEBRATION AT HOPEDALE.

The Celebration at Hopedale (Milford, Mass.), was held in a beautiful pine grove belonging to the Community, and numbered 700 or 800 people—many from Boston. Adin Ballou presided, and gave an interesting history of the Emancipation Act. Rev. R. Hassall of Mendon, Unitarian clergyman, formerly of England, made an excellent address. Charles C. Burleigh, in a lengthy argument, contended for the dissolution of the Union as promotive of the cause of liberty. After a recess, Rev. T. W. Higginson, of Worcester, eloquently addressed the company, and was followed by S. S. Foster, who, according to the Boston Telegraph, remarked that he had done with the Church; the Government was now the great sinner, and his attention would be confined to that hereafter in his addresses. Rev. Mr. Taylor, of East Medway, followed in a good speech.

CELEBRATION AT NEW BEDFORD.

This was under the direction of the coloured people of New Bedford and Providence, and afforded the highest satisfaction to all who participated therein. The New Bedford Mercury says:

"At twelve o'clock, the procession, under the guidance of H. O. Remington and aids, left the City Hall. Two military companies, the National Guards (coloured), Capt. Dorell, of Providence, and the Union Cadets of this city, formed a part of the procession, and made a very soldierly appearance. The Morning Star Beneficial Society, in regalia, with J. T. Freedom's singing-school in a large car, also made a fine display. The orator, Frederick Douglass, we noticed in a carriage with other officers of the day, his fine face giving promise of the oratorical treat to follow. The procession was accompanied by the East Stoughton Band and by Green's celebrated New England Band of Providence, and Green's bugle was the admired of all listeners. Altogether it was a very nice procession, and one which would do credit to any occasion. Want of space compels us to give but a meager account of the Celebration, which was one full of interest to those participating in it as well as to the friends of freedom generally."

CHILDREN'S CELEBRATION AT LONGWOOD, PA.

Correspondence of The Standard.

LONGWOOD (near Kennett Square), Pa., 8 mo. 2, 1855.

The First of August meeting, appointed by JOSEPH A. DUGDALE for the Children of this region, is over; and such a meeting! Little girls and boys were present not only from the immediate neighbourhood, but from Lancaster and Delaware Counties, and even from the State of Delaware. The spacious Longwood meeting-house was compactly filled. O what a sight it was to behold the sunny faces of hundreds of children, all animated by the feeling that the meeting was emphatically their own! The table on the platform was literally covered with flowers, and all around were smiles and beauty. JOSEPH A. DUGDALE opened the meeting in an appropriate and touching prayer, and then proceeded to deliver an address to the peculiarly interesting audience which his invitation had called together. He first gave an account of the emancipation of the slaves in the West Indies, and embraced the opportunity afforded for sowing the seeds of anti-slavery truth in the hearts of the young. He alluded also to other subjects, relating many pertinent anecdotes, and holding the attention of the children to the last. A more orderly auditory no speaker need ask. Coloured children mingled promiscuously in the crowd, and in no instance, that I have heard of, were they treated otherwise than as the equals of those of a white complexion.

JOSEPH DUGDALE was followed by Professor ANN L. PRESTON, of the Philadelphia Female Medical School, who made a very beautiful address, upon the conclusion of which the children proceeded with their friends to John Cox's woods, where they dined pic-nic fashion, in groups. Such a dinner, and such a joyous company, are not often seen. The clouds giving signs of rain, all hastily returned to the meeting-house, where Prof. PRESTON made another beautiful address, and a few of the children sang some very pretty songs. All the juveniles were as merry as larks, and those who were no longer children felt themselves young again.

The rain, it was thought, would entirely defeat the plan for visiting George Peirce's beautiful Park, but quite a number ventured a walk amidst its green beauty; and thus closed an occasion of rare and unmingled delight to us all.

ONE WHO WAS THERE.

---

At BANGOR, Me., William Wells Brown delivered an eloquent address, in the evening, in the City Hall. The Bangor Whig and Courier gives a very interesting passage from the speech, which want of room alone prevents us from copying.

---

At BUXTON CENTRE, Me., about 4,000 people assembled to listen to addresses by John P. Hale, Joshua R. Giddings, Gov. Morrill and others.

KANSAS MATTERS.

THE removal of Gov. Reeder has excited a deep feeling of indignation throughout the North. The pretence of the Administration that he was removed because of alleged illegal speculations in land is treated with the utmost contempt, and nowhere more than at the South, where the real motive for the act is openly avowed by the President's friends and trumpeted forth as an evidence of his fidelity to the slaveholding interest. There is no longer the slightest room for doubt that the President has from the start been the tool and confederate of Atchison and Stringfellow. It is confidently asserted in some quarters that Reeder was appointed originally to blind the North, in the expectation that he would resign and thus give the President an excuse for nominating a Southern man. However this may be, it is certain that the appointment had the effect of placing the President in circumstances of great embarrassment; for while Atchison & Co. clamoured for his removal, he was afraid to comply with their demands lest he should excite a fresh tempest of indignation at the North. In order to escape from this dilemma, he endeavoured to persuade Reeder to resign, and, as an inducement, offered first to make him Commissioner to China; and when this was declined, he made a still higher bid, offered to give him the place of Minister to England, from which Mr. Buchanan was expected soon to return. "The splendour of this proposition," says the Washington correspondent of the Tribune, "was a matter to consider, and after two days the Governor gave his ultimatum. He offered to resign if the President would write him a letter asking him to do so, and publish it in the Union, together with his reply, it being understood that his appointment to England should be gazetted immediately after. The President refused to publish such a correspondence, and the Governor accordingly left him under the necessity of turning out a Territorial Executive for the sole reason that he would not lend himself to the establishment of slavery by foreign invasion and conquest, against the will of the vast majority of the people of the Territory."

It is not yet known whether Mr. Dawson will accept his appointment as successor to Reeder. It is thought by some that he will decline, in accordance with a private arrangement, and that then the President will appoint a Southern fire-eater to the place. The Missouri ruffians, meanwhile, are having everything their own way in Kansas. They are now resolved to reannex to the Territory the whole Platte region of Missouri — comprising some half dozen Counties—which was originally seized by Missouri and incorporated as part and parcel of the State, in defiance of the Compromise Act; and now, it having been thoroughly peopled with slaveholders, Missouri is willing to relinquish it for the purpose of giving slavery a preponderating influence in Kansas.

A correspondent of the St. Louis Democrat writes from the border as follows:

"I have not yet given you any idea of the intense political earnestness of the border Missourians. Excitement does not convey a just idea of their feelings, and fanaticism has been too often abused to do so. Theirs is the earnestness which is calm in consequence of its depth and force; it is the earnestness of men ready to fight, preparing for a death-struggle. In America or Europe, I never saw anything like it. But on the opposite side of the river, in the Free Soil sections, I am told, deep has been answered by a profounder deep. The Free-Soilers are organizing military companies, and are determined to repel armed forces by armed forces at the next election, if the Missourians again attempt to cross the border to vote. They have been promised, moreover, aid and assistance from the Iowa pioneers.

"Several members of both parties expressed their opinions in my hearing that there would be blood spilt yet in Kansas. A pro-slavery politician said that if the Lawrence people did not take care, they would so enrage the Missourians that they would march upon it and burn it to the ground."

A correspondent of The Tribune says:

"The Legislature is made up of as ordinary men as you will meet at any common bar-room caucus. Take out two or three members from the Council, and twice that number from the House, and the balance would scarcely make a creditable Board of County Supervisors. Some of them are below all criticism. They are mostly all actual residents of Missouri, though a few have spent a short time in the Territory, just for the looks; as, for instance, McGee, who lives in Westport, Mo., with his family, and has not the most remote intention of changing his residence; though, since having been elected to the House, he has seen fit to reside awhile with his brother in the District he represents, nearly a hundred miles interior. His was one of the contested seats, and the procedure is a sample of others."

"In private, however, they laugh at their own impudence, not even pretending that their proceedings are legal. Even in their public debates, the absurdity of the entire performance not unfrequently puts to flight the mock gravity assumed for the occasion, and the members, with a dry humour quite amusing, assume that they are better qualified to make laws for the Territory than if they were actual residents themselves, inasmuch as their minds are not biased by local prejudices! Let the North understand these to be actual facts; that the first step of this body has been to vote the whole general code of Missouri into operation in Kansas, slavery laws, of course, included, and that they have since ordained that they will themselves appoint, for four years, the Justices of the Peace, Constables, &c., for the Territory, thus cutting off the people from the very commonest rights wont to be enjoyed by American freemen. And finallly, in view of these facts, let the North understand that all Kansas—whose voters are three to one in favour of Freedom—is indignant at these proceedings, which will be treated as a dead letter, and that all Missouri will not be able to compel obedience to laws brought into existence by so reckless a body of men."

"On the one hand, the Pro-Slavery party are determined, backed by Missouri, to give, by the enactments of this Legislature, the death-blow to their opponents; while, on the other, all through the Territory, the Free State men are preparing for organized opposition to all its laws. Some time the shock of collision must come."

WENDELL PHILLIPS AT DARTMOUTH COLLEGE.

A STRIKING evidence of the change that is rapidly going on in the public opinion of the country on the subject of slavery is seen in the fact that men long proscribed as fanatics and incendiaries are now the chosen orators at our College Commencements. Last year WENDELL PHILLIPS addressed the Literary Societies of Union College, at Schenectady; this year he appeared before those of Dartmouth, one of the oldest and best institutions of its kind in the country, the one that numbers Webster among its graduates, and fosters an ancestral pride second only to that of old Harvard. The following notice of Mr. P.'s oration we copy from the Northern Advocate,, published at Claremont, New Hampshire.

"In the house there was a perfect jam, of course—about every seat and standing-place being occupied. When the audience had become passably quiet, and a prayer offered, Wendell Phillips, Esq., the orator for the occasion, was introduced and received by three hearty and unanimous rounds of applause. Never have we seen a public speaker more cordially welcomed. Mr. Phillips is a man of about the ordinary size, was elegantly dressed, and his countenance indicative of all those noble qualities which are known to be peculiarly his own. He is a pleasant speaker, and came forward in front of the desk, without a single written line to guide his thoughts. This, before so large an audience of highly educated men and severe critics, was considered somewhat venturesome, and has seldom if ever before been attempted on similar occasions. He appeared, however, entirely free from embarrassment, and kindly thanked the audience for the very flattering reception they had given him. His appearance upon that platform he regarded as a favourable indication that the march of mind, of liberality, of progress, was onward, rapidly onward, and he thanked the Literary Societies of this old and venerable institution for the invitation they had extended to him to occupy an hour upon an occasion so highly interesting to its friends. The position he occupied in reference to the great question of the times—a question probably odious to many distinguished gentlemen before him—was well known to all who knew him, and his appearance there gave cheering evidence that the sympathies of educated, thinking men, were at length beginning to flow out in the right direction. The speaker had chosen for his theme "the servility of the American people," and he treated it with a candour and courtesy which could hardly have been expected from one who had so recently been indicted by the United States Court for speaking in defence of Liberty in Old Faneuil Hall! As he proceeded in his subject he arraigned the politician, the political parties, the press, the clergy, the church, the American Tract Society, and various other institutions, all which he handled with an intelligent truthfulness, and at the same time with a courtesy and a deference to the opinions of others, that rendered his arguments and reasoning almost irresistible. But we have not room even to allude to his various points, and, if we had, we should hardly dare trust ourselves to do it, lest we might, from mere memory, misrepresent him. He was listened to for over an hour and a half with the most candid attention, and was frequently interrupted by rounds of prolonged and hearty applause, and when he took his seat, he received 'three times three,' which made the old meeting-house 'ring as it never rung before.'"

Mr. Phillips was also honoured with a serenade at his lodgings. We observe, however, that he failed to please the keen-scented grimalkin who presides over the Vermont Chronicle, the organ of old fogy Orthodoxy in the Green Mountain State. The editor thinks that Mr. Phillips, having been graciously invited to speak on such an occasion, ought, by the obligations of courtesy, to have ignored the topics with which his name stands identified! This, however, is a rule which we have never known that journal to apply to conservatives, hunkers and lower-law orators, who are always expected, on such occasions, to utter the word that is uppermost in their hearts, regardless alike of the feelings or convictions of reformers.

The Northern Advocate appears to have liked the Commencement exercises much better than its Vermont neighbour. It says:

"Gentlemen who were in Hanover on Wednesday evening, and were among the thousands who listened to the speeches of Wendell Phillips, S. P. Chase, and 'long John,' speak in high terms of their beauty, and the vein of patriotic devotion to Liberty that ran through all of them. Mr. Chase spoke for over half an hour, and not a word was lost by the immense multitude that were in the street before him. He dwelt mainly upon the infamous scenes that were now transacting in Kansas, the direct, the anticipated result of the outrageous legislation of the last Congress. He, as well as the other speakers, was frequently interrupted by the most enthusiastic cheering. Our informant tells us that the flame of 'progressive liberty' seemed to be kindled up in every breast; and if there was any old conservative hunkerism present, not a lisp was heard from it. Even the graduating speakers on Thursday caught the fire, and not unfrequently referred to the great question of the times, not in a dead, conservative way, but with a spirit that foreshadowed an earnestness which, in after life, will cut its way through all opposing influences. God bless them. These demonstrations have very essentially increased our love for Old Dartmouth, and we sincerely hope that their influence will be salutary upon the mind of its venerable President."

HABEAS CORPUS REFUSED.

THE counsel for Passmore Williamson having applied to Chief Justice Lewis, of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, for a writ of habeas corpus, with a view to his liberation if the commitment of Judge Kane should be found to be illegal, that functionary denied the application for the reasons set forth in the following opinion:

LEWIS, C. J.—This is an application for a writ of habeas corpus. It appears by the copies of the warrants annexed to the petition, that the prisoner is confined for a contempt of the District Court of the United States, as in refusing to answer a writ of habeas corpus awarded by that Court against and at the relation of John H. Wheeler.

The counsel of Mr. Williamson very frankly stated, in answer to an interrogatory on the subject, that they did not desire the useless formality of issuing a writ of habeas corpus, if, on view of the course of detainer exhibited, I should be of opinion that the adjudication of the U. S. District Court was conclusive. The habeas corpus act does not require the writ to be granted in all cases whatever. Whenever it appears upon the face of the petition, or, which is the same thing, by the detainer annexed to it and forming part of it, that the prisoner is "detained upon legal process, order or warrant for such matter or offences for which by the law the said prisoner is not bailable," the case is excepted out of the act; see Act 18th Feb., 1785, sec. 1. In like manner, where the case has been already heard upon the same evidence by another Court, the act of Assembly does not oblige the Judges to grant a habeas corpus for the purpose of re-hearing it; although, perhaps, they may deem it expedient to do so in some extraordinary instances. Ex parte Lawrence, 5 Bin. 304.

We come, therefore, at once to the cause of detainer. Is it a "legal process, order or warrant for an offence which by law is not bailable?" Mr. Justice Blackstone, in Brass Crosby's case, 3 Wilson, 188, declared that "all Courts are uncontrolled in matters of contempt. The sole adjudication of contempts, and the punishment thereof in any manner, belongs exclusively, and without interfering, to each respective Court. Infinite confusion and disorder would follow, if Courts could, by writ of habeas corpus, examine and determine the contempts of others. This power to commit results from the first principles of justice; for if they have the power to decide they ought to have the power to punish." "It would occasion the utmost confusion if every Court of this State should have power to examine the commitments of the other Courts of the State for contempts; so that the judgment and commitment of each respective Court, as to contempts, must be final and without control." 3 Wilson, 204. This doctrine was fully recognised by the Court of Common Pleas of England, in the case referred to. It has since been approved of, in numerous other cases, in that country and in this.

In ex parte Kearney, 7 Wheaton, 38, it was affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States, in accordance with the decision in Brass Crosby's case, 3 Wilson, 188, that, "when a Court commits a party for contempt, their adjudication is a conviction, and their commitment in consequence is execution." 7 Wheaton, 38, 5 Cond. Rep. 227. In the case last cited, it was also expressly decided, that "a writ of habeas corpus was not deemed a proper remedy where a party was committed for a contempt by a Court of competent jurisdiction, and that, if granted, the Court could not inquire into the cause of commitment." 7 Wheaton, 38. Many authorities to the same effect are cited by Chief Justice Cranch, in Nugent's case. 1 American Law Journal, 111.

But it is alleged that the District Court had no jurisdiction. It does not appear that its jurisdiction was questioned on the hearing before it. The Act of Congress of 24th September, 1789, gives it power to issue "writs of habeas corpus which may be necessary for its jurisdiction, and agreeably to the principles and usages of law"; and the same act expressly authorizes the Judge of that Court to grant writs of habeas corpus "for the purpose of inquiry into the cause of commitment; provided, that writs of habeas corpus shall in no case extend to persons in jail, unless where they are in custody under the authority of the United States or committed for trial before some Court of the same, or are necessary to be brought into Court to testify. Other acts of Congress give the United States Judges jurisdiction in writs of habeas corpus in cases therein specified. It does not appear that the writ issued for persons in jail, or in disregard of State process or State authority. It may be that in an action at law, where the judgment of the United States Court is relied on as a justification, the jurisdiction should be affirmatively shown. But in a writ of habeas corpus, issued by a Judge having no appellate power over the tribunal whose judgment is shown as the cause of detainer, where the jurisdiction of the latter depends upon the existence of certain facts, and no objections to its authority are made on the hearing, the jurisdiction ought to be presumed, as against the party who might have raised the question at the proper time, but failed to do so. It is true that, if the jurisdiction be not alleged in the proceedings, the judgments and decrees of the United States Courts are erroneous, and may, upon writ of error or appeal, be reversed for that cause. But they are not absolute nullities. If other parties who had no opportunity to object to their proceeding, and who would not have writs of error, may disregard them as nullities, it does not follow that the parties themselves may so treat them.—Kempe's lessee vs. Kennedy—5 Cr., 183; Skillern's Exc'r vs. May's Exc'r—6 Cranch, 267; McCormick vs. Sullivan—10 Wheat, 192.

It is alleged that the right of property cannot be determined on habeas corpus. It is true that the habeas corpus act was not intended to decide rights of property, but the writ at common law may be issued to deliver an infant to a parent, or an apprentice to a master. Com. vs. Robinson, 1 S. & R., 35 B. On the same principle, I see no reason why the writ at common law may not be used to deliver a slave from illegal restraint, and to restore him to the custody of his master. But granting, for the purpose of argument (which I am far from intimating), that the District Judge made an improper use of the writ—that he erred in deciding that the prisoner refused to answer it—that he also erred in the construction of the answer which was given, and that he otherwise violated the rights of the prisoner, it is certainly not in my power to reverse his decision.

If a writ of habeas corpus had issued from a State Court to the United States Marshal, and that Court had adjudicated that the Marshal was guilty of a contempt in refusing to answer it, and had committed him to prison, the District Court of the United States would have no power to reverse that decision, or to release the Marshal from imprisonment. No Court would tolerate such an interference with its judgments. The respect which we claim for our own adjudications, we cheerfully extend to those of other Courts within their respective jurisdictions.

For these reasons the writ of habeas corpus is refused.

ELLIS LEWIS.

August 1, 1855.

It seems, then, that the law of the State affords no remedy for any tyranny, however grievous, which a corrupt or passionate United States Judge may choose to inflict upon an innocent man falsely charged with contempt. For aught that we can see, Judge Kane may keep Mr. Williamson incarcerated for life: and he will do so, if he waits for that noble man to make an apology, or take back a word that he has uttered. The following letter, which appeared in the Tribune of Monday, states very clearly the relative positions of the prisoner and his persecutor. It is possible that public opinion may accomplish what is beyond the power of law.

PHILADELPHIA, Saturday, Aug. 4, 1855.

Passmore Williamson is comfortable in jail. He is about 35 years of age, and has a wife and two children. His wife will be confined within a month. I have known him seven years intimately, and I state the matter thus: Philadelphia has her best man in jail. His integrity, truth, courage and goodness are each and all unsurpassed, and not a man in a million combines them all in equal excellence in his single character.

He is not rash, selfish or fanatical; and you may depend upon it he will stand it out in a fashion that will do credit to the best age of martyrdom. He is absolutely unconquerable.

Our friend Judge Kane will get tired of playing jailor to him. Passmore will neither break nor bend; and he is buckled by the best hearts in the country.

Heavens! what a choice the devil has made of a foe! Sevastopol to the allies is nothing to it.

---

ANNUAL REPORT, presented to the American Anti-Slavery Society, by the Executive Committee, at the Annual Meeting, held in New York, May 9, 1855. With an Appendix. Pp. 152.

At the Annual Meeting of the American Anti-Slavery Society, held in this city, in 1853, it was determined to revive the custom of an Annual Report, which, owing to various causes, had been unfortunately interrupted for a series of years. An arrangement was accordingly made with the Massachusetts Society, whose Reports had, in the meantime, covered the ground formerly occupied by those of the Parent Society, by which the latter was to be made responsible thereafter for the usual Annual Statement of the History, anti-slavery and pro-slavery, of each successive year. Circumstances beyond the control of the Executive Committee prevented the preparation of any Report for the Anniversary of 1854, so that the one for 1855, now before us, takes within the field of its survey a period of two years, beginning with the first of May, 1853, and coming down to the last Anniversary.

We reveal no secret when we say that this Report is from the same profoundly able and eminently skilful pen to which the cause is so deeply indebted for all the later Reports of the Massachusetts Society: we mean, of course, the pen of EDMUND QUINCY. It is a comprehensive and masterly sketch, not merely of the doings of the American Anti-Slavery Society and its Auxiliaries, but of the facts and events which make up the History of the Anti-Slavery Movement, in its Moral, Political and Religious bearings, for the two years ending on the first of May, 1855. The subject is distributed under the following heads, viz.

Congress.
Kansas and Nebraska.
Case of Anthony Burns.
Other Slave Cases—Judge McLean's Decision.
The Milwaukee Rescue and Decisions.
The Political Parties.
The Church.
The American Board.
The American Tract Society.
The British Islands.
Anti-Slavery Operations.
Deaths.
Conclusion.

Some of these topics are, of course, necessarily treated with brevity; but the Kansas and Nebraska outrage, the Case of Anthony Burns, Judge McLean's Decision, the Milwaukee Rescue and the important events by which it was followed, and the movements of the Political Parties, are presented with a fullness of detail commensurate with their high importance.

The Appendix contains the speeches made at the Anniversary in the Metropolitan Theatre, and the proceedings of the Society at the meetings subsequently held at the Freewill Baptist Church in Sullivan street; also lists of the officers of the several Auxiliary Societies.

If any one shall conclude that this Report must be a dry and uninteresting collection of documents and facts, intended for the enlightenment of some future historian, but of little value at the present time, he will make a very great mistake. Like good wine, its quality will of course improve with the lapse of time; but as a document for present reading and for general circulation, it is invaluable. There is not a dull nor an uninteresting line in it from first to last, and whoever begins to read it will go on, with constantly augmenting interest, to the end. Indeed we can see only one fault in it, and that our sense of justice to an injured party no less than our love of letters, compels us to notice. We perceive that the writer (or it may be the printer—possibly the "devil") compels the unfortunate letter s to do double duty in spelling the name of that audacious traitor, Senator Douglas. What sin has that letter committed that it should be unnecessarily and gratuitously subjected to such an indignity? The whole alphabet ought to resent the insult. We trust the author of the Report may be able to exculpate himself from all blame in this matter, otherwise let him expect the retribution due to so serious an offence.

We will only add that the Report is for sale at the Anti-Slavery Offices in New York, Philadelphia and Boston; price 25 cents.

---

LOWER CALIFORNIA.—Evidence is not wanting that the Slave Power of the United States is seeking to wrest this territory from Mexico and annex it ultimately to "our glorious Union." The Walker Fillibuster Expedition, which met with so disastrous a failure, was undoubtedly set on foot by American slaveholders. By the latest advices from the Pacific we learn that Melendrez, the former Commandante of the Territory, and who so valiantly resisted the Walker Fillibusters, has himself been condemned and shot as a traitor upon the charge of conspiring with others to sell Lower California to the Americans for the sum of $2,000,000. The Americans on the border declare that the charge was utterly ridiculous—that the only evidence offered to support it was that of a gang of thieves and desperadoes—that he was condemned without a hearing, &c. This may be true, but we must not too readily believe what may have been asserted only for the purpose of covering an unsuccessful and treasonable project. The Mexican Government may have had evidence of the existence of such a plot, and of the guilt of Melendrez, which left no room for doubt or mistake. Lieut. Pujol, the successor of Melendrez, issued the following orders, intended, it will be seen, to "crush out" all attempts to seize the territory.

1. Every foreigner who crosses the line without a passport signed by the Mexican Consul in San Francisco will be shot.

2. Those now in the Territory by the tolerance of the traitor Melendrez will leave immediately, and if they should fail to do so, Justices of the Peace, part-owners of haciendas, and mayor-domas of ranchos will order them to be shot.

3. Introduction of arms and munitions of war are forbidden, and violators of the order will be shot.

4. Whoever made common cause with Melendrez, or now attempts to follow in his footsteps, will be shot.

Foreign vessels found near the coast will be required to show their papers, and those at anchor in any roadstead, with passengers on board, will set sail forthwith; in case of non-compliance, they are to be considered pirates, and treated as such.

---

COUNTER AFFIDAVIT.—The partisans of Judge Kane, whose last plank was knocked from under their feet by the testimony of Mrs. Johnson, the former slave of Wheeler, that she went off voluntarily and had not at any time since been restrained of her liberty, and would rather die than go back into slavery, in order to reassure themselves and counteract, if possible, the tide of public opinion which bids fair to overwhelm them and their judicial leader in disgrace, have published an affidavit, purporting to be signed by the man who drove the carriage in which she was conveyed from the dock, and who testifies that he thinks the woman was forced away against her will! This is worse than ridiculous. It is not unlikely that the young man has been influenced to sign such an affidavit—which seems to say a good deal while it really amounts to very little—by threats of prosecution for his agency in depriving Wheeler of his "property." His testimony, weighed against that of the woman herself, is not worth a straw.

---

ADDRESS TO THE FREE DEMOCRATIC PARTY OF NEW YORK.—We have received from JOHN JAY, Esq., a copy of an Address "To the Free Democracy of the State of New York," signed by himself as President and by WM. R. KING as Secretary, in behalf of the "Free Democratic League" of this city, recommending to their fellow-citizens that no distinct Convention be this year called on the part of the Free Democracy for the nomination of State officers, but that they cordially unite with others in organizing County Conventions on the 15th of August, or some subsequent day, for the election of two delegates to represent each Assembly District in the Republican Convention, to be held in Syracuse, Sept. 26th. We regret that we cannot possibly find room for this Address, which sets forth very clearly the reasons for adopting the course which it so earnestly recommends. There is no doubt, we presume, that its advice will be generally, if not unanimously, followed. The project for a fusion of the anti-Nebraska forces of this State seems now in a fair way to succeed.

---

ELECTIONS.—Tennessee, it seems, has gone for the Democracy, greatly to the disappointment of the National Know-Nothings, who felt sure of carrying it. The returns from North Carolina are not sufficient to determine the result, but it is probable that the Slave Democracy have carried off the greatest number of prizes. The returns from Alabama are quite meagre, affording no basis for even a guess at the result. The Know-Nothings have probably carried Kentucky.

Our Philadelphia Correspondence.

PHILADELPHIA, August 6th.

PASSMORE WILLIAMSON is still in prison; how long he will remain will depend, for aught that appears, on the dictum of the petty despot that sent him there. The grossness of this outrage cannot easily be exaggerated. The more it is looked at and the better it is understood, the more infamous does it appear.

There is a strong reaction in the public mind since the appearance of Jane Johnson's deposition before Judge Culver. It is Kane now, and not Williamson, that is in limbo. Mr. Williamson's 10 by 15 cell is spacious compared with the tight place to which the Judge finds himself committed. The Judge's friends are anxious about him and desirous to get him out, but how they are to do it is the question. Williamson, with his "obstinate fanaticism," to use the language of The Pennsylvanian, will make no concessions; he will not amend his return to the writ, he will not help make amends to Mr. Wheeler for his loss; he will make no appeals for clemency and will ask no favours; how then is the Judge to get out? He is committed to his tight place by his answer to Mr. Gilpin, when, after the sentence, he was asked by that gentlem n, how long the imprisonment was to last: "During contempt," was the reply. So you see there is no way for him to get out, except by backing out; he must eat his words and come out through the valley of humiliation. There is no uneasiness felt in regard to Mr. Williamson by his friends; but the same cannot be said for the friends of the Judge. They show signs of great anxiety, and they have reason for it. Judge Kane will find this case one of even greater "gravity" than he had imagined it to be. It will break him down as sure as Kane is his name. The father of Mr. Williamson has just been reading to me the articles in to-day's Tribune in regard to his son. One of these says, Mr. W. "will neither break nor bend." "That's true," said the father; "he will neither break nor bend." If Judge Kane had searched Philadelphia with a candle he could not have found a subject worse adapted to his purpose than the one he waked up in Passmore Williamson.

It was reported, to-day, that Judge Kane had been down to Moyamensing to see his prisoner. I hardly think this is true. The Judge has made mistakes enough in this case, and he had better not make the matter worse by another blunder. No Pecksniffian professions of regard for the prisoner, as entertained either by himself or his sons, will be of any avail to atone for the offences that are past or to avert the storm that is to come. Judge Kane is a doomed man. He may hold his office as long as men of his kidney are a majority in the United States Senate, but the respect which should belong to the position, and all prospect of higher honour, he has forfeited forever. Judge Kane, by his supererogatory charges of perjury and evasion, has challenged a comparison in regard to moral character between himself and Passmore Williamson. Very well, let the scrutiny be instituted; if Judge Kane can bear the test, so much the better for him.

The decision of Judge Lewis, of the Supreme Court, is regarded, as a cowardly evasion of responsibility. Such a man as Judicial custodian of the rights of a State and the freedom of its citizens is out of place. How much better he is than Judge Kane let those determine who are accustomed to make nice distinctions.

I have just seen four of the five coloured men who acted so brave a part in the rescue. They are very respectable looking persons, and instead of being sorry for what they did, would like nothing better than to have a chance to repeat their offence. A handsome purse for their benefit, and to pay all legal expenses incurred, or to be incurred in their behalf, has been raised by merchants in Market street and others, and I had the pleasure of handing to each an instalment to meet immediate necessities. It was a pleasant duty, and they were grateful and worthy recipients. The only drawback on their pleasure, they said, was the thought that Mr. Williamson was still in prison.

I see by the Times of this city that a report has appeared in one or more of the papers that Mr. Williamson's apartment is luxuriously furnished, and that he holds daily Levees of his friends. This story is almost as groundless as Judge Kane's decision. The apartment is a cell of—I should say—10 feet by 15; and the furniture consists of a rickety Windsor chair, a small pine table, and a cot bedstead—all of the commonest kind and second-hand—and two yards and a half of threadbare ingrain carpet. They were hired for Mr. W.'s use by one of his friends. The cot reminded me of the answer to the old conundrum, "When is a bedstead not a bedstead?" Answer—"When it is a little buggy." From the looks of the article and from the prisoner's experience in regard to it, I should say that this was one of those anomalous bedsteads that was not a bedstead.

It is in contemplation to hold a public meeting in this city, to express some of the indignation that is felt at the high-handed outrage perpetrated by Judge Kane. The first steps have been taken toward it, and I have no doubt a meeting of the kind will be held.

We are arranging to hold a general anti-slavery meeting the latter part of this month, or the beginning of next, in Norristown. It will commence at 10 A. M. and hold all day. Samuel Aaron, Mr. Furness, Mrs. Mott, Robert Purvis, B. Rush Plumly, Thomas Whitson and other of the good old stand-by's of the State, we hope to have present on the occasion.

M.

AGENTS FOR THE WESTERN FIELD.

THE Executive Committee of the American Anti-Slavery Society have appointed STEPHEN S. FOSTER, of Massachusetts, JOHN H. PHILLEO and AARON M. POWELL, of New York, lecturing agents for the coming season in the Western States. It is expected that their term of service will commence with the Annual Meeting of the Western Anti-Slavery Society, which is to be held at Alliance, Ohio, on the 25th inst., and two days following. It is also expected that CHARLES C. BURLEIGH will begin a term of anti-slavery lecturing, in Ohio, Michigan, &c., as an agent of the American Society, about October 1st.

---

THE PRESS ON JUDGE KANE.—We could fill our entire sheet with articles gleaned from the leading papers of the North, denouncing Judge Kane's tyrannical decision, and showing by conclusive argument that it was as great an outrage upon the law as it was upon justice and common sense. We are ourselves agreeably surprised by the depth and extent of the indignation which that decision has aroused. The press of Philadelphia alone seems tame, spiritless, and hardly sensible of the outrage perpetrated under its eye. The North American, however, did publish an exceedingly pertinent and able review of Judge Kane's opinion, written, it is said, by one of the ablest lawyers of Philadelphia, who not only proves that the Judge acted illegally, but intimates that he has made himself liable to Passmore Williamson in an action for damages.

---

SILAS LAMSON, or "Father Lamson," as he was familiarly called, well known in Boston for his harmless eccentricities—the fruit, it is believed, of mental derangement—died at the residence of his son, at Shelburne Falls, Mass., on the 29th ultimo. His long white beard, his clothes made of undyed wool, and his general patriarchal appearance, marked him as one of the characters of the city.

---

RIOT AT LOUISVILLE.—The election at Louisville, on Monday, was illustrated by a riot, in which dwelling houses and other buildings were sacked and burned, many persons killed, and a still larger number wounded. The quarrel was between the Germans and Irish on one side and the Know-Nothings on the other. The accounts are too confused to enable us to form a judgment as to the merits of the case.

---

LIBERIA.—Late advices from Liberia inform us of the election of Hon. Stephen A. Benson as President of the Republic for two years, President Roberts declining a re-election. The "opposition" candidate was Hon. Edward J. Roge, a very

Miscellaneous Department.

PETER CARTWRIGHT, THE BACKWOODS PREACHER.

From The National Magazine for August.

We once gave a sketch of Peter Cartwright in these pages. It would be unpardonable to omit the adventures of such a character from this class of "jottings"; we must then call him again into your presence, "courteous reader," even if we should repeat some of his stories already told.

He appears broken with years and labours, and you perceive some paralytic tremblings in his attitude and voice; but there is nevertheless a general aspect of strenuous vigour about him. He looks as if he might yet wrestle with bears and come off conqueror, as we learn he really has heretofore. He is war-worn and weather-beaten. His complexion is bilious, the integuments of his face wrinkled and tough, his eyes small and twinkling, defended by a heavy pair of spectacles with green side glasses, his mouth compact and full of force, his head large and round, his forehead deeply indented, and his hair—there is no description of that; it looks as if he had poked it into the bag of the Kilkenny cats, and had not time to comb it since its extrication. And yet do not suppose there is any fierceness about his caput. Nay, verily; a face more finely characterized with good nature and gallant generosity is not to be seen. Should we attempt an intellectual portrait of Peter Cartwright we should summarily say that he is characterized by good sense and good humour. We know not that we can better describe him. He strikes right at the object before him, and never fails to hit it; and he has that characteristic of the highest wisdom—brevity, sententiousness. We never knew him to speak in General Conference more than five minutes at once. His humour is always spontaneous—always ready. It sometimes cuts sharply, but is usually genial and generous, relieving rather than exasperating the case. Humour is a rare excellence, but it is not, like gems, valuable chiefly for its rareness; it is intrinsically valuable. It should not be too severely grinned at, with elongated faces, even in ecclesiastical bodies; it often gleams like exhilarating sunlight among lowering clouds of discord, and sometimes dispels them, and does infinately more than the strongest logic or the loudest rhetoric to remove obstructions to business. Still, a man of combined good sense and good humour is liable to suffer some disparagement. Our poor human nature has a sort of self-complimenting propensity to speak of a superior man with a qualifying "but," the import of which is, that though he excels us in some things, we can see in him defects we have not ourselves. He has imagination, "but" he has not much sense; he has humour, "but" he has not much logic. Much of this kind of twaddle is shere fudge, and something worse. Peter Cartwright is not merely a man of humour, but of genuine sagacity; woe be to the man that attempts to circumvent him in debate. If some of his short sayings were divested of their humour, and spoke by a grave man, they would pass for unique utterances of wisdom: as they are, they pass for pertinent jokes—happy hits. Peter Cartwright is a "Doctor of Divinity." Good old George Pickering, when asked once if the Methodists had any Doctor of Divinity, replied, "No, sir, we don't need them; our divinity has not yet become sick."

Those healthful days seem, however, to have passed, if we may judge from the ample provisions made for theological medication among us now-a-days. Some college in the West deemed Peter Cartwright too knowing in the Materia Medica, or too skillful with the scalpel, to die untitled, and, therefore, dubbed him D.D. We know not that he pretends to encyclopedic erudition, or is more skilful than some other doctors we are acquainted with in the learned languages—a knowledge of which is usually presupposed in giving that title; the only learned quotation we ever heard from him was in respect to a matter of business; it was, said he, "in swampus non-comatibus." The learned doctors around him smiled very cognizantly, as they usually do at College Commencements when a Latin phrase is quoted which, though unintelligible to the vulgar throng, is always remarkably striking to them.

His fellow-soldier in the West, James B. Finley, gives the following further account of him, of which we gave an extract once, but now give it fully:

"Immense was the gathering at the Methodist camp-ground near Springfield, on the second Sunday of Sept., 1832. A powerful magnet had attracted this great mass of people from their homes in many counties a hundred miles round. The new presiding elder, a late arrival from Kentucky, an orator of wide-spread and wonderful renown, it was known, would thunder on that day. The prestige of his fame had lightened before him, and hence the universal eagerness to hear one concerning whom rumour's trumpet-tongue discoursed so loudly.

"Morning broke in the azure east, bright and beautiful as a dream of heaven; but the ex-prodigy had not made his advent. Eleven o'clock came—the regular hour of the detonation of the heavy guns of orthodoxy—and still there was no news of the clerical lion. A common circuit preacher took his place, and, sensible of the popular disappointment, increased it by mouthing a miserable failure. The vexed and restless crowd began to disperse, when an event happened to excite afresh their curiosity and concentrate them again denser than ever. A messenger rushed to the pulpit in hot haste, and presented a note, which was immediately read out to prevent the people from scattering. The following is a literal copy of that singular epistle:

"'DEAR BRETHREN. The devil has foundered my horse, which will detain me from reaching your tabernacle till evening. I might have performed the journey on foot; but I could not leave poor Paul, especially as he has never left Peter. Horses have no souls to save, and, therefore, it is all the more the duty of Christians to take care of their bodies. Watch and pray, and don't let the devil get among you on the sly before candlelight, when I shall be at my post. Your brother,

"'PETER CARTWRIGHT.'"

"At length the day closed. The purple curtain of night fell over the earth from the darkening sky. God's golden fire flashed out in the heavens, and men below kindled their watch-fires. The encampment, a village of snowy tents, was illuminated with a brilliancy that caused every leaf to shine and sparkle as if all the trees were burnished with phosphorescent flame. It was like a theatre. It was a theatre in the open air, on the green sward, beneath the starry blue, incomparably more picturesque and gorgeous than any stage scenery, prepared within walls of brick or marble, where the élite of cities throng to feast their eyes on beauty and their ears on music.

"Presently a form arose in the pulpit, and commenced giving out a hymn, preliminary to the main exercises, and every eye became rivited to the person of the stranger. Indeed, as some one said of Burke, a single flash of the gazer's vision was enough to reveal the extraordinary man, although, in the present case, it must, for the sake of truth, be acknowledged that the first impression was ambiguous, if not enigmatical and disagreeable. His figure was tall, burly, massive, and seemed more gigantic than the reality from the crowning foliage of luxuriant, coal-black hair, wreathed into long, curling ringlets. Add a head that looked as large as a half bushel; beetling brows, rough and craggy as fragmentary granite, irradiated at the base by eyes of dark fire; small and twinkling like diamonds in a sea—they were diamonds of the soul, shining in a measureless sea of humour—a swarthy complexion, as if embrowned by a southern sun; rich, rosy lips, always slightly parted, as wearing a perpetual smile; and you have a life like portrait of the far-famed backwoods preacher.

"Though I heard it all, from the text to the amen, I am forced to despair of any attempt to convey an accurate idea of either the substance or manner of the sermon which followed. There are different sorts of sermons—the argumentary, the dogmatic, the postulary, the persuasive, the punitive, the combative, 'in orthodox blows and knocks,' the logical, and the poetical, but this specimen belonged to none of these categories. It was sui generis and of a new species.

"He began with a loud and beautifully modulated tone, in a voice that rolled on the serene night-air like successive peals of thunder. Methodist ministers are celebrated for sonorous voices; but this was matchless in sweetness as well as power. For the first ten minutes his remarks, being preparatory, were commonplace and uninteresting; but then, all of a sudden, his face reddened, his eye brightened, his gestures grew animated as the waftures of a torch, and his whole countenance changed into an expression of inimitable humour; and now his wild, waggish, peculiar eloquence poured forth like a mountain torrent. Glancing arrows, with shafts of ridicule, bon-mots, puns, and side-splitting anecdotes sparkled, flashed and flew like hail till the vast auditory was convulsed with laughter. For a while the more ascetic strove to resist the current of their own spontaneous emotions. These, however, soon discovered that they had undertaken an impossible achievement in thinking to withstand his facetiæ. His every sentence was like a warm finger, tickling the ribs of the hearer. His very looks incited to mirth far more than other people's jokes, so that the effort to maintain one's equilibrium only increased the disposition to burst into loud explosions, as every shool-boy has verified in similar cases. At length the encampment was in a roar, the sternest features relaxed into smiles, and the coldest eyes melted into tears of irrepressible merriment. This continued thirty minutes, while the orator painted the folly of the sinner, which was his theme. I looked on and laughed with the rest, but finally began to fear the result as to the speaker.

"'How,' I exclaimed, mentally, 'will he ever be able to extricate his audience from that deep whirlpool of humour? If he ends thus, when the merry mood subsides, and calm reflection supervenes, will not the revulsion of feeling be deadly to his fame? Will not every hearer realize that he has been trifled with in matters of sacred and eternal interests?' At all events there is no prospect of a revival to-night; for even though the orator were a magician, he could not change his subject now, and stem the torrent of head-long laughter.'

"But the shaft of my inference fell short of the mark: and even then he commenced to change, not all at once, but gradually, as the wind of a thunder-cloud. His features lost their comical tinge of pleasantry; his voice grew first earnest, and then solemn, and soon wailed out in the tones of deepest pathos; his eyes were shorn of their mild light, and yielded streams of tears, as the fountain of the hill yielded water. The effect was indescribable, and the rebound of feeling beyond conception. He descanted on the horrors of hell, till every shuddering face was turned downward, as if expecting to see the solid globe rent asunder, and the fathomless, fiery gulf yawn from beneath. Brave men moaned, and fair fashionable women, covered with silken drapery and bedight with gems, shrieked as if a knife were working among their heart-strings.

"Again he changed the theme; sketched the joys of a righteous death—its faith, its hope, its winged raptures, and angels attending the spirit to its starry home—with such force, great and evident belief, that all eyes were turned toward heaven, and the entire congregation started to their feet, as if to hail the vision of angels at which the finger of the preacher seemed to be pointed, elevated as it was on high to the full length of his arm.

"He then made a call for mourners into the altar, and five hundred, many of them till that night infidels, rushed forward and prostrated themselves on their knees. The meeting was continued for two weeks, and more than a thousand converts were added to the church. From that time his success was unparalleled, and the fact is chiefly due to his inimitable wit and masterly eloquence that Methodism is now the prevailing religion in Illinois.

"He was distinguished by one very unclerical peculiarity—combativeness. His battles, although always apparently in the defensive, were as numerous as the celebrated Bowie. The only difference was this, that Bowie fought with deadly weapons, while the itinerant used but his enormous fist, which was as effective, however, in the speedy settlement of belligerent issues as any knife or pistol ever forged out of steel. Let the reader judge from the following anecdote:

"At the camp-meeting held at Alton in the Autumn of 1833, the worshippers were annoyed by a set of desperadoes from St. Louis, under the control of Mike Fink, a notorious bully, the triumphant hero of countless fights, in none of which he had ever met an equal, or even second. The coarse, drunken ruffians carried it with a high hand, outraged the men and insulted the women, so as to threaten the dissolution of all pious exercises; and yet such was the terror the name of their leader, Fink, inspired, that no one could be found brave enough to face his prowess.

"At last, one day, when Cartwright ascended the pulpit to hold forth, the desperadoes, on the outskirts of the encampment, raised a yell so deafening as to drown utterly every other sound. The preacher's dark eyes shot lightning. He deposited his Bible, drew off his coat, and remarked aloud:

"'Wait for a few minutes, my brethren, while I go and make the devil pray.'

"He then proceeded with a smile on his lips to the focus of the tumult, and addressed the chief bully—

"'Mr. Fink, I have come to make you pray.'

"'The desperado rubbed back the tangled festoons of his blood-red hair, arched his huge brows with a comical expression, and replied—

"'By golly, I'd like to see you do it, old snorter.'

"'Very well,' said Mr. Cartwright; 'will these gentlemen, your courteous friends, agree not to show foul play?'

"'In course they will. They're rale grit, and won't do nothin' but the clear thing, so they won't,' rejoined Fink, indignantly.

"'Are you ready?' asked the preacher.

"'Ready as a race-hoss with a light rider,' answered Fink, squaring his ponderous person for the combat.

"The bully spoke too soon; for scarcely had the words left his lips when Cartwright made a prodigious bound toward his antagonist, and accompanied it with a quick, shooting punch of his herculean fist, which fell, crashing the other's chin, and hurried him to the earth like lead. Then, even his intoxicated comrades, filled with involuntary admiration at the feat, gave a cheer. But Fink was up in a moment, and rushed upon his enemy, exclaiming:

"'That war n't done fair, so it war n't.'

"He aimed a ferocious stroke, which the preacher parried with his left hand, and, grasping his throat with the right, crushed him down as if he had been an infant. Fink struggled, squirmed and writhed in the dust; but all to no purpose; for the strong, muscular fingers held his windpipe as in the jaws of an iron vice. When he began to turn purple in the face, and ceased to resist, Mr. Cartwright slackened his hold and inquired—

"'Will you pray now?'

"'I does n't know a word how,' gasped Fink.

"'Repeat after me.'

"'Well, if I must, I must,' answered Fink; 'because you're the devil himself.'

"The preacher then said over the Lord's prayer line by line, and the conquered bully responded in the same way, when the victor permitted him to rise."

At the consummation the rowdies roared three boisterous cheers, and Fink shook Cartwright by the hand, declaring—

"'By golly, you're some beans in a bar-fight. I'd rather set-to with an old "he" bar in dog-days. You can pass this 'ere crowd of nose-smashers, blast your pictur'!'

"Afterward Fink's party behaved with extreme decorum, and the preacher resumed his Bible and pulpit."

An odd scene that, certainly; and "not very apostolic," say you, sober reader. We join you in the remark; but it is characteristic, as we said in another case.

We give it as a fact from our old friend Finley—a fact that illustrates not only the character of the man, but of the country and its early times. "Circumstances alter cases," is a popular proverb in the West, as well as elsewhere; and even good men are heard, occasionally, to affirm out there, that Lynch law is better than no law.

Mr. Bungay, in his volume of "Off-hand Takings of Noticeable Men of our Age," says that he heard Peter, at Boston, during the last General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and thus describes the occasion:

"The great western preacher has arrived, and is now searching the well-thumbed Bible for his text. Quite a number of distinguished divines are present. The preacher looks like a backwoodsman, whose face has been bronzed at the plough. His black hair, straggling seven ways for Sunday, is slightly tinged with the frost of age. A strip of black silk is twisted around his neck, and a shirt collar, scrupulously clean, is turned down over it. He is of ordinary size, dresses plainly, and looks like a man perfectly free from affectation. In a faltering voice he reads a hymn. The choir wed the words to sweet and solemn music—a fervent prayer goes up on the wings of faith—another hymn is read and sung—the 12th verse of the 11th chapter of Matthew is selected for his text. Now the old pioneer preacher, who has waded swamps, forded rivers, threaded forests, travelled with Indians, fought with bears and wolves, preached in the woods and slept in the field or on the prairie at night, is standing before us. Look at him, ye gentlemen with white neckcloths and black coats, who ride in carriages over smooth roads to supply churches with cushioned pews and soft benches to kneel on. How would you like to labour for nothing among wild beasts, and board yourselves, in a climate where the ague shakes the settlers over the grave two-thirds of the year? Would you exchange your fat livings, and fine palaces, and unread libraries, for black bread and dry venison, a log hut and the society of bears and blue racers? God bless the brave, wise and good men to whom we are so much indebted for the blessings we enjoy. He says he would make an apology if he thought it would enable him to preach better, for he is afflicted with a severe cold. 'Some folks,' said he, 'say I am fifty years behind the age. God knows' he continued, 'I am willing to be a thousand behind such an age. Religion is always of age, and can talk or run without stilts or silver slippers.' He concluded an able and interesting discourse, which elicited undivided attention, with the following fact: 'During a splendid revival of religion at the West, a young preacher, manufactured in one of your theological shops out here, came to lend a helping hand. I knew he could not handle Methodist's tools without cutting his fingers, but he was very officious. Well, we had a gale—a pentecostal gale—and sinners fell without looking for a soft place, and Christians fought the devil on their knees. Well, this little man would tell those who were groaning under conviction to be composed. I stood this as long as I could, and finally sent him to speak with a great, stout, athletic man, who was bellowing like a bull in a net, while I tried to undo the mischief he had done to others. He told this powerful man to be composed, but I told him to pray like thunder—just at that instant the grace of God shone in upon his soul, and he was so delirious with delight, he seized the little man in his hands, and holding him up, bounded like a buck through the congregation.' It is impossible for the pen to do justice to this fact. The speaker moved us all to tears and smiles at the same moment, while he said what few men would venture to say,"

While he was preaching, years ago, General Jackson, entered the church, when a pastor seated in the pulpit gave his "brother Cartwright" a nudge, and whispered that the old hero had just come in—as much as to advise, "Now be particular in what you say." But Peter, to the astonishment of everyone, louder than ever, exclaimed—"Who cares for General Jackson? He'll go to hell as soon as anybody, if he does n't repent!"

When the sermon—a home-made one—was ended, a friend asked the General what he thought of that rough old fellow, and received for answer, "Sir, give me twenty thousand of such men, and I'll whip the world, including the devil!"

It is quite possible, brother reader, that your and our notions might not quite agree with the general's; yet neither of us can fail to see in this eccentric but veteran evangelist, the man of his times and his circumstances. And you, dear sir, starched, and brushed, and perfumed, who now recline in the stuffed arm-chair of your garnished study, wondering why the world should take any interest in such a specimen of humanity—what kind of a specimen would you have been? what would you have done in the rough battles through which this weather-worn but jolly-hearted old man has borne the standard of the cross—borne it with a brawny but ever-faithful arm? God bless the old man, with all his oddities; and may he yet fight his way into heaven.

Peter Cartwright joined the "old Western Conference" in 1805, though he began to travel a year earlier, we believe. He was a young man—only about eighteen years old—when he entered the itinerant field, and he has been in its foremost struggles ever since. The "old Western Conference" was in that day the only one beyond the Alleghanies. It extended from Detroit to Natchez, and each of its districts comprised a territory about equal to two of the present conferences beyond the mountains. Those were the days of great moral battles in that vast field; and the men who fought them were made great, some of them gigantically so, by their circumstances. Among them were, Young, Walker, Shinn, M'Kendree, Burke, Lakin, Blackman, Quinn and similar mighty men. Cartwright began his regular travels with Lakin on Salt River Circuit—(save the name)! Most of his fellow-heroes have gone to their rest; but they gained the field, and fortified their cause all over it. They, in fact, laid the moral foundations of our ultra-montane States. The few remnants of the old corps should be cherished and honoured by their Church.

A SONG.

[From "Maud," a new poem, by Tennyson, now in press.]

COME into the garden, Maud,
For the black bat, Night, has flown,
Come into the garden, Maud,
I am here at the gate alone;
And the woodbine spices are wafted abroad,
And the musk of the roses blown.

For a breeze of morning moves,
And the planet of Love is on high,
Beginning to faint in the light that she loves
On a bed of daffodil sky,
To faint in the light of the sun she loves,
To faint in his light, and to die.

All night have the roses heard
The flute, violin, bassoon;
All night has the casement jessamine stirr'd
To the dancers dancing in tune;
Till a silence fell with the waking bird,
And a hush with the setting moon.

I said to the lily, "There is but one
With whom she has heart to be gay.
When will the dancers leave her alone?
She is weary of dance and play.
Now half to the setting moon are gone,
And half to the rising day;
Low on the sand and loud on the stone
The last wheel echoes away.

I said to the rose, "The brief night goes
In babble and revel in wine.
O young lord-lover, what sighs are those,
For one that will never be thine?
But mine, but mine," so I sware to the rose,
"For ever and ever, mine."

And the soul of the rose went into my blood,
As the music clash'd in the hall;
And long by the garden lake I stood,
For I heard your rivulet fall
From the lake to the meadow and on to the wood,
Our wood, that is dearer than all;

From the meadow your walks have left so sweet
That whenever a March-wind sighs,
He sets the jewel-print of your feet
In violets blue as your eyes,
To the woody hollows in which we meet,
And the valleys of Paradise.

The slender acacia would not shake
One long milk-bloom on the tree;
The white lake-blossom fell into the lake,
As the pimpernel dozed on the lea;
But the rose was awake all night for your sake,
Knowing your promise to me;
The lilies and roses were all awake,
They sigh'd for the dawn and thee.

Queen rose of the rosebud garden of girls,
Come hither, the dances are done,
In gloss of satin and glimmer of pearls,
Queen lily and rose in one;
Shine out, little head, sunning over with curls,
To the flowers, and be their sun.

There has fallen a splendid tear
From the passion flowers at the gate.
She is coming, my dove, my dear;
She is coming, my life, my fate;
The red rose cries, "She is near, she is near;"
And the white rose weeps, "She is late;"
The larkspur listens, "I hear, I hear;"
And the lily whispers, "I wait."

She is coming, my own, my sweet;
Were it ever so airy a tread,
My heart would hear her and beat,
Were it earth in an earthy bed;
My dust would hear her and beat,
Had I lain for a century dead,
Would start and tremble under her feet,
And blossom in purple and red.

LADY NAIRNE, THE SCOTTISH SONG WRITER.

From The Eclectic Review.

CAROLINA OLIPHANT (Lady Nairne) was born in Perthshire, on the 16th of July, 1766. The scene of her birthplace is one of the most beautiful spots in Scotland. The impressions which the fair face of nature made upon her tender opening soul were never effaced, and she rejoiced to sing of Strathearn, "the sweet scene of her childhood, the delight of her youth," and of the "auld house of Gask."

Here was awakened within her that keen sense of the beautiful in nature which pervades her poems, and by means of which she felt towards lovely spots as towards kind and affectionate friends, from which it was difficult to wrench herself. In after years she travelled over foreign lands, but she never forgot dear auld Scotland, with its burnies tumblin' down, the bonny banks and braes of its rivers, its stern mountains and its cloudy many-tinted sunsets. She was thoroughly Scottish in feeling. She finds delight in her native land, wherever she is, in Banff as well as on the banks of Clyde, in Edinburgh as well as in Strathearn. What a beautiful image is that in her farewell to Edinburgh—

Auld Reekie, fare ye weel, auld Reekie new beside—
Ye're like a chieftain auld and gray, wi' a young bonnie bride.

Her father gave her the name of Carolina in honour of Prince Charlie, to whose family he was a devoted adherent. Dr. Rogers says of him (page 185)—"He would not permit the names of the reigning monarch and his queen to be mentioned in his presence; and when impaired eyesight compelled him to seek the assistance of his family in reading the newspapers, he angrily reproved the reader if the 'German lairdie and his leddy' were designated otherwise than by the initial letters 'K. and Q.'"

The daughter caught the infection from her father. She was fond of the good old cause, as she believed it to be, and has written several of the very best of our Jacobite songs, "A hundred pipers an' a," "Will ye no come back again." "There grows a bonnie brier bush," are, doubtless, well known to many of our readers. There is a great deal of spirit in these verses, and sometimes she rises into a region of grandeur; witness these lines, addressed to one of the Stuart family under the name of the man o' the moon:

Now liberty's awaking,
The clouds around thee breaking;
The darkest hour o' night
Is just before the light:
So man o' the moon we hail thee.

A questionable liberty it certainly would have been, and we are thankful that we had no trial of it.

Notwithstanding her strong attachment to the Stuarts, Lady Nairne's heart was too good not to sympathize deeply with the Covenanters; and though her poems on them are far from being among her best, they testify to her sense of their heroic character and worth.

Lady Nairne began to write verses while she was yet young. The beautiful sweet girl, known in her neighbourhood as "The Flower of Strathearn," was patriotic to the core, and above everything the songs of her native country moved her inmost soul.

But she felt that many of these songs were bad in their influence, and detrimental to the best interests of men. This feeling begot within her a strong desire to supplant such, and so she tried her powers—with complete success. The "Land o' the Leal" and the "Laird o' Cockpen" were both written about the end of last century, and she soon saw many of her songs general favourites with the people.

In 1806 she married, and for some time gave up literary pursuits. But in 1821 a collection of Scottish songs began to be published in parts, and her aid having been requested, she contributed a good number of her productions under the signature of B. B. These verses are very various. Almost all of them bear the stamp of the lady's character. Some are touching in their simplicity; some are pervaded with humour which springs from kind-hearted clear-seeing common sense—many of them express deep sympathy with the care-worn, proclaiming the evils of intemperance and duelling, and one or two appeal to men in behalf of the innocent birds and other harmless creatures, whose lives are too often sacrificed to purely-destructive propensities. We give a few specimens. Here is one which combines shrewdness with poetical imagery:

SAW YE NE'ER A LANELY LASSIE.

Saw ye ne'er a lanely lassie
Thinkin' gin* she were a wife,
The sun of joy would ne'er gae down
But warm and cheer her a' her life.

Saw ye ne'er a weary wife,
Thinkin' gin she were a lass,
She wad aye be blithe and cheerie,
Lightly as the day wad pass

Wives and lasses, young and aged,
Think na on each ither state,
Ilka† ane it has its crosses,
Mortality was ne'er complete.

Ilka ane it has its blessings,
Peevish dinna pass them by,
Seek them out like bonnie berries,
Tho' among the thorns they lie.

Lady Nairne's interest in the lost and wandering was genuine. She had a noble, deeply sympathetic heart; and there is generally a heartfelt pathos in those songs which portray the sufferings of the outcast and the miseries of the debased. We give one touching little bit on a "Mitherless Lammie." Who has not known such? The pet and charge of her native village, blessed by all, whose orphaned childhood was strewed with roses, sent adrift at last into the bleak world and caught by the snares of pleasure and the devil:

THE LAMMIE.

The mitherless lammie ne'er miss't its ain mammie,
We tended it kindly by nicht and by day;
The bairnies made game o't, it had a blythe hame o't,
Its food was the gowan, wi' dew drops o' May.
Without tie or fetter, it cou'dna been better,
But it wad gae witless the world to see,
The foe that it fear'd not, it saw not, it heard not.
Was watching its wand'ring frae Bonnington Lea.

O what then befell it 'twere waefu' to tell it,
Tod Lowrie* kens be-t, wi' his lang head sae sly;
He met the pet lammie, that wanted its mammie,
And left its kind hame, the wide world to try.
We missed it at day dawin,' we missed it night fain';
Its wee shed is tenantless under the tree;
Ae nicht i' the gloamin, it wad gae a roamin';
'Twill frolic nae mair upon Bonnington Lea.

* If. † Every.

* Fox.

BEARDS AND THEIR BEARERS.

"Now of beards there be
Such a company,
Of fashions such a throng,
That it is very hard
To treat of the beard,
Though it be ne'er so long."
—Ballad in LE PRINCE D'AMOUR. (1650.)

* * * * * *

VAN HELMONT, in support of a theory, asks us if we ever saw a good angel with a beard—one of those questions which are supposed by those who put them to determine a dispute at once. He falls to another conclusion thereupon; and maintains that if good angels do not wear beards, the men who do are guilty of profanity, and love goats rather than godliness. Van Helmont himself was extremely perplexed by the Jesuit casuists, who wrote on the lawfulness of beards, and who most lucidly proved, under three heads—1st, That we are bound to shave the beard; 2d, That we are bound to let it grow; and, 3d, That we may do either the one or the other.

St. François de Sales, the gentleman saint, was less perplexing when, on being asked by a lady whether she might not rouge, smiled, and answered, certainly, if she only painted one cheek.

Van Helmont hit the happy medium left by the Jesuitical argument, and, shaving his beard, only cultivated his mustachios.

Southey is rather inclined to accept the Dutch account of the derivation of beards, based as it is on the certainty that no man ever saw a good angel wearing one; "for," says he, "take the most beautiful angel that ever painter designed or engraver copied, put him on a beard, and the celestial character will be so entirely destroyed, that the simple appendage of a tail will cacodæmonize the Eudæmon." So it may be said that a monk with a fine polished bald head is hedged with a sort of divinity, and looks altogether reverend; but only sprinkle powder from a dredging-box upon the baldness, and you make him, if not ridiculous, certainly mundane.

The English clergy do not appear to have estimated beards by Van Helmont's scale. One of the body, in the reign of Elizabeth, cherished his beard as an incentive to righteousness. "He wore it," he said, "to remind him that no act of his life should be unworthy of the gravity of his appearance." This good gentleman's beard assuredly did not deserve what Shakspeare affirms some men's do, namely, "not so honourable a grave as to stuff a botcher's cushion, or to be entombed in an ass's pack-saddle." Henry VIII., on the other hand, would not tolerate monitorism even from his own beard, and he accordingly and characteristically cut it short. Perhaps this monarch also wished to have it out of the way of petitioners; for stroking the beard, in sign of supplication for mercy, was for thousands of years a recognised fashion, as may be seen in the Classics, and in Shakspeare, passim. It will be remembered that Hudibras stroked his own beard before he proceeded to "honour the shadow" of the lady's shoe-tie. This act has been editorially declared to have been done as in sign of asking for her favour; from the recollection, I suppose, of Thetis "palming" the chin of Jupiter; but I think it was merely a piece of gallantry, "dressing," as it were, for the occasion, as in Congreve's 'Way of the World,' wherein it is said, "The gentlemen wait but to comb, Madam, and will wait on you." Formerly, no gallant ascended to a lady's boudoir without first combing his peruke at the foot of the stairs, and assuring himself, by a glance at his pocket mirror, that he was as well-looking a fop as ever wasted morning in talking nonsense to a speaking and painted doll.

To pull another person's beard was to inflict on the wearer the most degrading insult that could be thought of. When the Jew, who hated and feared the living Cid Rui Dios, heard that the great Spaniard was dead, he contrived to get into the room where the body lay, and he indulged his revengeful spirit by contemptuously plucking at the beard. But the "son of somebody" (the hidalgo) was plucked temporarily into life and indignation by the outrage, and, starting half up, endeavoured to get at his sword—an attempt which killed the Jew by the mere fright which it caused.

To shave a Moslem's beard was once a penalty as terrible as to a Chinese the cutting off his extended tail; and Christian princes have so esteemed the appropriate, that they have pawned the beard, or a portion of it, for money lent, and redeemed the sacred pledge punctually at the promised hour. They would have forfeited all claim to be honoured of men, or rewarded of God, had they failed in their contract. In modern times they pledge only their words; and as words are of less value than beards, they are not so careful about the redemption thereof. That terribly mendacious personage, the Czar Nicholas, has, at all events, made his "parole de gentleman" to be synonymous with deliberate falsehood.

The beard, however, was long a cherished ornament of Russian chins, and the Czar Peter was accused of profanity against that orthodoxy which so distinguishes his successors by abolishing them. He certainly abolished the huge and spreading honours of the Muscovite jaws by a rough process. Taxes were laid upon them, which had their weight upon every hair; and when the recalcitrant were encountered in the street, they were seized, and their beards either torn from them or shaved off with an oyster-knife, whereby half the chin went with the entire beard. The loyal nobility compromised the matter by preserving their beards in their cabinets, to be buried with them. They conjectured that the angels would neither know nor welcome them if they presented themselves at Heaven's gate with clean chins: they thought more of these than of clean souls.

Taylor, the water poet, catalogues in rough rhymes the various fashions after which beards were worn. They are too tedious to enumerate, and yet do not enumerate every fashion; for omission is made of the fact that it was once the very "sweetest" mode to wear strings to the beard, as Jack the highwayman did to the knees of his breeches, and the kings of Persia, who interwove their beards with gold thread. The "cane-coloured" beard was always held as detestable, that hue having been, according to tradition, that of the beard of the traitor Judas. The famous Count Brühl, who lost Saxony, but preserved a collection of wigs, was more practical than the Water Poet. His wig museum not only contained every variety, but they were chronologically arranged, from the days of Aaron to those of the Count's own time. I may add, that I have never heard of the beard being held in dishonour except among the Chaymas, in South America, who have a great antipathy against it.

Apollo and Mercury are the only deities of olden times who are represented beardless. When professional barbers first arose it would be difficult to say; Rome got hers from where she procured her cooks—Sicily; but the Eternal City was four centuries and a half old before the chins of her sons were submitted to the handling of mercenaries. Scipio Africanus, despite the turmoil of battles, found time to shave every day; and he was the first Roman who did so. Had the Senate followed the same fashion, the invading Gaul would not have found a beard to pluck, and perhaps the city might have been saved. The old Persians were very obstinate in this respect; and they and the Tartars waged bloody wars, and spilled oceans of blood in no better quarrel than the fashion of the beard. These heathens were almost as wicked as the Christian inhabitants of the adjacent towns of Bouvignes and Dinant, in Flanders. The people of both localities manufactured copper kettles, and each declared that the other's ware was made after a sorry fashion. The animosity thus created led to bloody and long-continued feuds; but peace was happily restored by the time that other towns had applied themselves to the manufacture, and this gave the old antagonists the more leisure to ruminate upon their own folly.

When Alexander ordered the Macedonian soldiers to shave, lest their beards should be handles whereby their enemies might capture them, smooth chins become a universal Greek fashion. It so continued to the reign of Justinian; but when the Turks took Byzantium, they would allow of beards only on the chins of the conquerors; and the Normans treated the Anglo-Saxons according to the same rule. Subsequently, in the year 1200, the Council of Lateran swept off the beards of the monks, "lest, in the ceremony of receiving the sacrament, the beard might touch the bread and wine, or crumbs and drops fall and stick upon it." The monks then were, like the Emperors, utraquists. Of course, dispensation was to be obtained by paying for it, and it was probably therefore that the decree was issued; but some wore their beards, in despite of the Church and her chancery, for the same reason that Fitzherbert Longbeard did in the Norman times, to show his independence of all superiors and their orders.

If there really has been wisdom in the wig, there has been wit in the beard, or its owner. More, on the scaffold, put it out of the reach of the axe, because, as he said, it had committed no treason. Raleigh, when visited by the barber of the Tower, declined to have his beard trimmed, on the ground that there was a lawsuit pending about it, between him and the King, and he would not lay out any capital on it till the cause had been decided.

* * * * * *

The last barber who held something more than barber's office under a Christian king was Olivier le Dain, the familiar of Louis XI. In Persia, it has been common for the monarch's barber to be a prince over the people. The Khasterash, or "personal shaver," is reverenced by all inferior citizens; and they see nothing incongruous in the fact that a palace and slaves are part of the rewards of the man who makes the beard of the Shah an eighth wonder of the world. The beard, in fact, has ever been held in reverential regard by all Moslems, for the reason that their prophet never allowed instrument to diminish his own. An Arab would foe as much horror-stricken now as ever Lacedemonian fugitive was of old if, in punishment for offence, he were condemned to lose, by shaving, the half of his beard. He would infinitely prefer to lose half of his family.

* * * * * *

The first man who shaved himself at Athens acquired a name by the act. He was called Koraes, the shaven or clipped. Diogenes despised fashion, and therefore kept his beard. Not only that; he abused all who dispensed with it. "Ah!" he exclaimed with that mouth which lay behind a portion of his own hirsute dirtiness—for Diogenes had a contempt for soap—"Ah!" cried he, on encountering a friend newly mown, "art thou inclined, then, to reproach Nature? Wouldst thou insinuate that she had done better to have made thee a woman rather than a man?"

At Rhodes, all shaving was forbidden; but the Rhodians loved to display their independence of the law, and every man did what seemed best to his own chin. The same unruly sort of liberty was taken by the Byzantine barbers. The law expressly denounced razors, but scissors were tolerated. Clipping was permitted, but shaving was pronounced irreligious. Some priests shaved in spite of the decree. It was made a diocesan-court matter of; and the chief pontiff, a sort of bishop in his way, rendered an admirable judgment on the occasion. He regretted his limited powers, but he said his course was clear. Scissors were lawful, razors illegal; but the priest had first used the former, and the law did not say that razors should not be used after the scissors had been applied. For his own part, he did not well know which to adopt; but he thought his reverend gentlemen would be justified in keeping razors, but not in using them—themselves. They might shave each other.

* * * * * *

The Mahometans are very superstitious touching the beard. They bury the hairs which come off in combing it, and break them first, because they believe that angels have charge of every hair, and that they gain them their dismissal by breaking it. Selim I. was the first Sultan who shaved his beard, contrary to the law of the Koran. "I do it," said he apologetically to the scandalized and orthodox mufti, "to prevent my vizier leading me by it." He cared less for it than some of our ancestors, two centuries ago, did for their own. They used to wear pasteboard covers over them in the night, lest they should turn upon them and rumple them in their sleep!

The famous Raskolniki schismatics had a similar superstition to the Mahometan one mentioned above. They considered the divine image in man to reside in the beard.

Not only have the shavers of barbaric kings been accounted superior to the Prime Minister, as in our own country French coiffeurs are infinitely better paid than English curates; so to be shaved by a prince is to be exalted to exstatic honours. Hoskins, the traveller, was so operated on by the heir apparent of the Shaghes. His royal highness used a threepenny razor, and at every stroke carried away as much chin as beard; the honour was too much for the traveller, especially when it was cut out with a blunt razor.

Rogers is said to have once asked Talleyrand if Napoleon shaved himself. "Yes," said the latter, "one who is born to be a king has some one to shave him, but they who acquire kingdoms shave themselves." He might have added, "And the people too, pretty closely!"

But I am pulling the beard to a greater extent than my readers' patience will be inclined to bear with it. I have only to add, that the beard was a symbol of bravery as well as of wisdom; and he who had a good one on his chin was usually able to grasp a sword to some purpose in his hand.

* * * * * *

—From Habits and Men.

THE LETTERS.

[From Tennyson's "Maud."]

STILL on the tower stood the vane,
A black yew gloom'd the stagnant air,
I peer'd athwart the chanced pane
And saw the altar cold and bare.
A clog of lead was round my feet,
A band of pain across my brow;
Cold altar, Heaven and earth shall meet
Before you hear my marriage vow.

I turn'd and humm'd a bitter song,
That mock'd the wholesome human heart
And then we met in wrath and wrong.
We met, but only meant to part.
Full cold my meeting was and dry;
She faintly smiled, she hardly moved;
I saw with half unconscious eye
She wore the colours I approved.

She took the little ivory chest,
With half a sigh she turned the key,
Then raised her head with lips compress,
And gave my letters back to me.
And gave the trinkets and the rings,
My gifts, when gifts of mine could please;
As looks a father on the things
Of his dead son, I looked on these.

She told me all her friends had said;
I raged against the public liar;
She talk'd as if her love were dead,
But in my words were seeds of fire.
"No more of love; your sex is known:
I never will be twice deceived.
Henceforth I trust the man alone,
The woman cannot be believed.

Thro' slander, meanest spawn of hell
(And woman's slander is the worst),
And you, whom once I loved so well,
Thro' you, my life will be accurst."
I spoke with heart, and heat, and force,
I shook her breast with vague alarms
Like torrents from a mountain source
We rush'd into each other's arms.

We parted: sweetly gleam'd the stars,
And sweet the vapour-braided blue,
Low breezes fann'd the belfry bars,
As homeward by the church I dr